(4) Under the rule the court may call attention only to the conflicts, and a charge purporting to tell the jury why the answers are conflicting constitutes reversible error, and so where jury returned conflicting answers and trial court informed jury that the answers were conflicting and why they were conflicting, and jury finally reconciled all answers and brought in a verdict, there was reversible error.—Port Worth & Denver City Ry. Co. v. Walters, Tex.Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 177, error refused.

(5) Trial court should advise jury of the conflict without indicating or permitting counsel to do so that it would be to the interest of one of the parties to have a certain issue answered in a certain way.—Pantazis v. Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co., Tex.Civ.App., 162 S.W.2d 1018, error dismissed.

(6) Evidence held not to sustain contention that trial court, in retiring jury for further deliberation because of irreconcilable conflict in their answers to issues submitted, committed the error of telling jury their answers were wrong, or coerced jury into agreeing upon and returning into court its final verdict.—Pantazis v. Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co., Tex.

discussed in Judgments § 55 b. The defect is one which cannot be waived by the parties.⁵³

While answers or findings which conflict with each other may require the setting aside of the special verdict in which they are contained,⁵⁴ they have no effect on and do not control, overcome, or override a general verdict⁵⁵ which will stand if otherwise special findings sufficient to support the general verdict are not in conflict with it.⁵⁶ In any event, conflicting findings destroy each other only to the extent of the conflict,⁵⁷ and, if what remains is sufficient to support a judgment, the conflicting findings are immaterial.⁵⁸ The fact that two answers or findings are somewhat inconsistent is not always fatal,⁵⁹ as where they are reconcilable,⁶⁰ one is material and the other is im-

Civ.App., 162 S.W.2d 1018, error dismissed.

(7) Written instruction prepared by trial court in presence of counsel for both sides without exception thereto, calling attention of jury to conflict in findings, duly read to the jury, was held not an illegal comment by the court, but instead a proper compliance with rules.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Collins, Tex.Civ.App., 179 S.W.2d 525, error refused.

Trial judge acted within his discretion in pointing out conflict in answers of jury to special issues and sending jury back with instructions to further deliberate with a view to removing or reconciling conflict.—Maryland Cas. Co. v. Brown, Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 130, reversed on other grounds 115 S.W.2d 394, 131 Tex. 404.

Repeated reconsideration

(1) In repeatedly sending jury back for further deliberations when jury presented inconsistent verdicts trial court did not abuse its discretion, it being within discretion of court to send jury back as often as necessary to the end of obtaining a coherent verdict that would support a judgment and thus avoid the necessity of declaring a mistrial.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Horton, Tex.Civ.App., 119 S.W.2d 122, error dismissed.

(2) So, the return of jury to jury room three times in order to eliminate conflicts in their answers to special issues was not error, where trial court did not disclose to jury the effect of their answers.—Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Clark, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 799, error dismissed, judgment correct.

A litigant should not be deprived of his right to a submission to jury of his grounds of defense simply because conflicting answers may be given by jury.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Young, Tex.Civ.App., 148 S.W.2d 229.

Controlling issue

(1) Inconsistency or conflict in jury findings will not prevent rendition of final judgment where there is finding free from conflict on a controlling issue.—Ford Rent Co. v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 290.

(2) Where conflict of findings on special issues is not on a controlling issue, it may be reasonably reconciled with all other issues as found by jury.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Milliken, Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 108.

(3) Where a finding is made upon an issue which determines a cause, other issues bearing upon the same cause become immaterial, and the fact that other findings are made not in any way inconsistent with the findings which dispose of the case is of no consequence.—In re Anderson's Estate, 85 P.2d 212, 29 Cal.App.2d 637.

Finding not immaterial

Where jury made irreconcilable findings, one finding could not be disregarded as immaterial so as to authorize entry of judgment for plaintiff, even if the trial judge could properly have refused the issue.—Cox v. Ekstrom, Tex.Civ.App., 163 S.W.2d 845, error refused.

Findings not on "ultimate" or "material" issues

In trespass to try title suit, wherein plaintiff claimed that deed from plaintiff to defendants was forged, but jury found that deed was duly executed, special issues on whether plaintiff claimed the land adversely to defendants after execution of the deed or agreed with defendants to live upon the land upon certain conditions, which did not embrace all statutory elements of adverse possession, and if answered consistently would not support judgment for either party grounded upon limitation title, were not "ultimate" or "material" issues on any limitation title, and hence inconsistency in findings thereon did not preclude judgment for defendants, where definitions of legal terms used in such issues were not requested or given.—Hogg v. Facts not essential to judgment

Conflict between facts admitted or as to which there is no issue, and findings by jury of facts not essential to rendition of judgment, cannot destroy or affect validity of verdict, where material facts have been found sufficient to support and require entry of judgment.—Southland-Greyhound Lines v. Richardson, 86 S.W.2d 731, 126 Tex. 118—Monte Carlo Distributing Co. v. Rosas, Tex.Civ.App., 127 S.W.2d 334, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Where jury found no negligence, the issues of damages were out of the case, and hence findings on issues submitted to ascertain items of damage, in event that jury found negligence under the negligence issue, were not in irreconcilable conflict with findings on other issues in case.—Shell Oil Co. v. out violating established rules of construction.⁷⁶ For the purpose of possible reconciliation, apparent conflicts should be examined in the light of the facts of the particular case, the pleadings and the evidence, the manner in which the issues were submitted, and in view of other findings when considered as a whole.⁷⁷ However, in giving effect to contradictory findings the court cannot resort to conjecture,⁷⁸ and it should not strain a point to harmonize the various answers for the purpose of making them as a whole inconsistent with the general verdict.⁷⁹

a. In General

As a general rule special findings or answers which are absolutely irreconcilable with the general verdict control the general verdict and a judgment may and must be rendered according to the special findings or answers, unless the jury are instructed to reconsider and this course is permissible, or the court in its discretion directs a new trial.

Special findings or answers may not be set aside merely because they are inconsistent with the general verdict.⁸⁰ On the contrary, although there is authority for the view that a special finding or verdict is merely advisory and cannot control a general verdict,⁸¹ as a general rule special findings or answers to special interrogatories which are so inconsistent with, and antagonistic to, the general verdict as to be absolutely irreconcilable with it control the general verdict,⁸² and, under the con-whether a conflict exists in answers to special issues.—Little Rock Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Dunn, 222 S.W.2d 985, 148 Tex. 197.

Statute implying answers controlling

A statute providing that if any answer to special interrogatories is inconsistent with the general verdict, the court may order judgment appropriate to the answers notwithstanding the verdict or send the jury back for further deliberation necessarily implies that the question submitted is controlling.—Ipsen v. Ruess, 41 N.W.2d 658, 241 Iowa 730.

General finding as mere legal conclusion

Where special findings conflict with general findings in an action submitted on special issues, general finding is treated as a mere legal conclusion, effect of which is destroyed by the adverse finding of controlling fact upon which conclusion rests.—Harbin v. City of Beaumont, Tex. Civ.App., 146 S.W.2d 297, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Anything in jury's special findings so opposed to its general conclusions as to show that latter could not have been found on record without contradicting special findings requires that such conclusions be disregarded.—Hartley v. A. I. Rodd Lumber Co., 276 N.W. 712, 282 Mich. 652.

Reply construed as special verdict

Jury's affirmative answer to query in form of instruction to state whether verdict for defendant in action on fire insurance policy was based solely on ground that appraisal of loss was not had for reason attributable to plaintiff or his appraiser was special verdict controlling general verdict for defendant.—Jacobs v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 40 P. 2d 899, 4 Cal.App.2d 1.

The fact that special questions do not support a general verdict is no ground for setting the general verdict aside, since it is only when the answers to special questions are inconsistent with the general verdict that such relief may be had.—Frakes v. Travelers Mut. Cas. Co., 84 P.2d 871, 148 Kan. 637.

Judgment not obstante verdicto: When and for whom granted generally see Judgments § 60. Distinguished from judgment on special findings against general verdict see Judgments § 60 e.

Other answers favoring general verdict

Where answer to interrogatory excludes every conclusion authorizing recovery by party who has general verdict, judgment should be entered on such answer, even if other answers given by jury on other points the case and this course is permissible,⁸⁴ or the court in the exercise of its discretion directs a new trial.⁸⁵ On the other hand the general verdict will stand⁸⁶ and judgment in conformity therewith should be rendered, as discussed in Judgments § 55, where it and a special verdict, special findings or answers to questions or interrogatories are consistent or can be reconciled. Furthermore, the general verdict may stand even though there is some apparent inconsistency between it and the special findings.⁸⁷

The general verdict will stand unless it and the special findings or answers to interrogatories are clearly and absolutely irreconcilable⁸⁸ so that both favor party relying on general verdict.—Tribune-Star Pub. Co. v. Fortwendle, Ind.App., 115 N.E.2d 215, rehearing denied 116 N.E.2d 548.

Where general verdict was for a lesser amount than total damages indicated in special findings, court properly based its judgment on special findings.—Kirkpatrick v. McMillan, 167 P.2d 772, 49 N.M. 100.

Where general verdict is rendered on erroneous instructions submitting an improper issue, party in whose favor special verdict is rendered on decisive issue in case is entitled to judgment thereon notwithstanding general verdict.—Shaffner v. Price, 260 N.W. 703, 63 S.D. 456, 98 A.L.R. 689.

Volunteered general verdict was properly ignored and judgment on special findings inconsistent therewith was properly rendered.—Campbell v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 284 S.W. 261, affirmed, Com.App., 290 S.W. 626.

Approval of special findings

Where special findings establish facts barring plaintiff's recovery, the granting of a new trial must be viewed as an inadvertence, and judgment for defendant is authorized if the trial court approves such findings, but a ruling that the special findings are supported by the evidence accompanied by a refusal to enter judgment thereon and the granting of a new trial is tantamount to a disapproval of the special findings, and without the requisite approval of the trial court judgment cannot be ordered on the special findings.—Lapo v. Naillieux, 29 P.2d 1093, 139 Kan. 23.

Inconsistency between special findings and general verdict as ground for new trial generally see New Trial § 66 b.

Judgment unjust

Where special findings or answers to interrogatories are such as to warrant entry of judgment contrary to general verdict, trial court may nevertheless, in its discretion, direct a new trial instead of entry of judgment, if in its opinion it would be unjust to party against whom judgment was entered to foreclose him from any further opportunity to establish his right to recover, either upon original or amended pleadings; and trial court in refusing to render judgment contrary to general verdict, although special findings or answers to interrogatories seem to entitle party against whom general verdict was found to such judgment, may make a finding showing reasons for such exercise of discretion.—Gesauldi v. Connecticut Co., 41 A.2d 771, 131 Conn. 622.

Application of statute

Before the statute providing that, when a special finding of facts is inconsistent with the general verdict, the former shall control the latter, and court may give judgment accordingly, is applicable, there must exist such an inconsistency between the special finding and the general verdict that they are irreconcilable.—Welch v. Rollman & Sons Co., 44 N.E. 2d 726, 70 Ohio App. 515.

Question calling for conclusion of law

Defendant's special interrogatory whether there was any negligence of plaintiff that proximately contributed to cause automobile collision did not call for a special finding on a particular question of fact, but improperly called for a combined finding of fact and a conclusion of law, and hence jury's affirmative answer to interrogatory did not require court to enter judgment for defendant notwithstanding general verdict for plaintiff, on ground of inconsistency between general verdict and answer to special interrogatory.—Felder v. Fugh, 81 N.E.2d 639, 84 Ohio App. 271.

special findings as against the general verdict.¹ A finding on a defective interrogatory does not overrule a general verdict.² While it has been held that the fact that the jury's special findings are inconsistent with one another is not necessarily fatal to the general verdict,³ the question being whether the special findings, when considered as a whole, are so inconsistent with the general verdict that they cannot be reconciled with it,⁴ it has also been held that, where the special findings are inconsistent with each other, some being consistent with the general verdict and others inconsistent therewith, no judgment can properly be entered either on the general verdict or on the special findings,⁵ but a new trial should be ordered.⁶

a. Construction and Presumptions

Special findings should, if reasonably possible, be so construed as to harmonize them with the general verdict, and no presumption will be indulged in favor of inconsistency, nor will any inference, presumption, or intention be indulged in their aid as against the general verdict; but every presumption, intention, and inference in favor of the general verdict which may be drawn from any evidence admissible under the pleadings will be indulged.

b. Matters Considered Generally

As a general rule in determining whether special findings or answers are so inconsistent with the general verdict as to authorize or require judgment on the former notwithstanding the latter, the court will consider only the verdict, answers or findings, and the pleadings or issues formed thereby, and ordinarily will not weigh or consider the evidence actually introduced.

No regard will be paid to answers of the jury with respect to matters not submitted to them¹⁷ or improperly submitted,¹⁸ to immaterial matters,¹⁹ or to mere conclusions.²⁰

c. Remedies and Proceedings to Determine

Where the special findings or answers are irreconcilably inconsistent with the general verdict, a motion for judgment on the special findings or answers, notwithstanding the general verdict, is the proper procedure. Such a motion must be seasonably made by the party to whom the general verdict is adverse, and it admits or concedes, for the purpose thereof, that the findings or answers are sustained by the evidence.

Where the special findings or answers to special interrogatories are so inconsistent with, and antagonistic to, the general verdict as to be absolutely irreconcilable with it so that a judgment may and must be rendered according to the answers or special findings notwithstanding the general verdict, as discussed supra § 563, a motion for judgment on the special findings or answers, notwithstanding the general verdict, is the proper procedure.²¹ The motion may be made by and only by the party to whom the general verdict is adverse.²² Such mo-

Conclusion and ultimate facts distinguished

If in answering an interrogatory, the jury is required not only to consider the facts, but also to apply some legal principle to such facts, or to measure them by some standard fixed by law in order to reach the conclusion required by the answer, the answer which results is a "legal conclusion" and not an "ultimate fact," and must be disregarded in ruling on motion for judgment on the answers to the interrogatories, notwithstanding general verdict.—Tucker Freight Lines v. tion must be seasonably made.²³ If timely made, the motion is sufficient to preserve the question for future consideration of the court,²⁴ and it is not waived by the subsequent filing, within the time limited by statute, of a motion for a new trial.²⁵ The motion may be sufficient, although informal in some respects.²⁶ It admits or concedes, for the purpose thereof, that the findings or answers are sustained by evidence,²⁷ although such admission or concession does not bind the trial court.²⁸ When the motion is made after a motion to set aside the special findings or answers has been sustained in part, the court can consider only those special findings and answers which it has permitted to stand.²⁹

§ 565. Surplusage

It is proper to disregard as surplusage certain matters contained in a special verdict or findings, such as conclusions of law, or findings of immaterial facts or on immaterial questions or issues.

It is proper to disregard as surplusage certain matters contained in a special verdict or in special findings or answers to interrogatories,³⁰ such as conclusions of law,³¹ evidentiary facts,³² a memorandum preceding the answers,³³ findings on, or answers to, issues or interrogatories improperly submitted,³⁴ a finding on a matter not submitted to the jury,³⁵ findings of matters outside the issues,³⁶ or findings of immaterial facts or on immaterial questions or issues.³⁷ Also, it has been held that a gen-

Question calling for more than one fact

Interrogatories, each of which called for more than a single issuable fact were improperly submitted to jury and such interrogatories and the answers thereto must be treated as surplusage.—White v. Shircliff Industries, Inc., Ind.App., 112 N.E.2d 888.

Cumulative issues

In action for balance due for labor, in which trial court submitted issues whether plaintiff worked, whether defendant advanced him supplies, and whether plaintiff killed defendant's dog, additional issues submitting question of defendant's indebtedness and amount thereof, if objectionable, were merely cumulative and could be disregarded as surplusage.—Weatherby v. eral verdict may be ignored where, without any instructions from the court, it was returned with answers to questions submitted.³⁸

§ 566. Defects and Errors

A special verdict or finding containing a substantial defect or error is unavailable as a basis for judgment, but the fact that a particular special finding is defective or erroneous is not fatal where there are other proper and sufficient findings or there is a sufficient general verdict on which judgment may be based.

A special verdict or finding containing a substantial defect or error is unavailable as a basis for judgment.³⁹ However, the fact that a particular special finding is defective, improper, or erroneous is not fatal where there are other proper and sufficient findings⁴⁰ or there is a sufficient general verdict⁴¹ on which the judgment may be based; but it is otherwise where judgment is rendered on an answer or finding which is ambiguous,⁴² contrary to the instructions,⁴³ or so defective as to an important matter as not to authorize judgment thereon;⁴⁴ and the trial court is without power to disregard a finding on a material issue because it is defective in some particular.⁴⁵

§ 567. Amendment or Correction

- a. In general
- b. Resubmission to jury

a. In General

The jury may change their special verdict, findings, or answers at any time before they are received; but, while the court may, on proper grounds, set aside a special verdict, finding, or answer, ordinarily, it may not reverse or change the findings of the jury, make additional or independent findings, unless the finding is contrary to the undisputed credible evidence or without support in the evidence so as to make the matter one of law, although the court may remedy defects which are clearly clerical or formal.

The jury may change their special verdict, findings, or answers at any time before they are received.⁴⁶ However, the oral reply of two jurors,

Answers immaterial under prior answers

Where jury answers one issue, or subdivision of an issue, and later answers other issues or subdivisions of issues, the answers to which are not called for by reason of particular answers made to preceding issue, or its subdivision, answers to the subsequent issues become immaterial.—Erwin v. Welborn, Tex.Civ.App., 207 S.W.2d 124, error refused no reversible error.

Where evidence was insufficient to support jury's answers to special issues, trial court could disregard such answers as being immaterial.—Texas Steel Co. v. Rockholt, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 842, error refused.

If as a matter of law defendant is free of negligence and jury has exonerated him but has also attributed to him some degree of causal negligence in their comparison of negligence, court should strike answer to question on comparison as surplusage.—Statz v. Failure to sign answer

Where there were issues other than negligence upon which jury was warranted in returning verdict for defendant, fact that one of jurors who signed general verdict for defendant did not sign negative answer to interrogatory as to whether defendant was negligent did not vitiate general verdict.—Simpson v. Springer, 55 N.E.2d 418, 143 Ohio St. 324, 155 A.L.R. 583.

Correction of clerk's reading

Where clerk, in reading answers of jury to issues, read ambiguous answer to one issue and jury foreman said clerk had not read such answer correctly, and judge directed clerk to read further and clerk, after changing answer as read, finished reading of verdict, and jury said that answers read by clerk were jury's answers, and defendant did not object to and other than the foreman, is ineffective to modify formal written answers of the jury.⁴⁷

By party. A part of a finding of fact by a jury is not subject to a so-called remittitur by a party.⁴⁸

By court. The court may, on proper grounds, set aside a special verdict, answer, or finding⁴⁹ when to do so does not affect the import of the answers or findings on other issues,⁵⁰ and it may grant a new trial because of irregularities and defects in the verdict or findings, as discussed in New Trial §§ 63-67. Ordinarily, however, the court may not reverse⁵¹ or change⁵² the answers or findings of the jury, make additional⁵³ or independent⁵⁴ findings, or substitute its own answers or findings for those of the jury,⁵⁵ or at least it may not, without the consent or over the objection of the parties, change or amend a special verdict, answer or finding in matters of substance,⁵⁶ depending on the weight and

(4) In common-law damage actions where jury returns verdict for plaintiff and answers special questions, and defendant moves to set aside answers to some questions, on ground that they are not sustained by the evidence, trial court must use its independent judgment and set aside such answers as it finds were not sustained by the evidence, and on such motion court is authorized to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony, and answers should be interpreted from the viewpoint that jury was finding specific facts from evidence, without considering principles of law.—Walker v. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., 139 P.2d 157, 157 Kan. 170.

(5) If the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding, the court cannot set it aside on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding.

(7) It has been declared that it is not enough that evidence, contrary to jury's finding, preponderates or has greater convincing power.—Bohner v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 248 N.W. 421, 211 Wis. 501.

(8) However, there is some authority for the view that a finding against the manifest weight of the evidence may be set aside.—Paul v. Garman, 24 N.E.2d 884, 310 Ill.App. 447.

Effect of setting aside

Where trial court, on motion, set aside jury's answers to special questions, such questions stood as though no answers had been made, or as though the questions had not been submitted.—Walker v. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., 139 P.2d 157, 157 Kan. 170.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings

(1) If there is some or any credible evidence to sustain the jury's findings, the trial court is not permitted to change them.—Kemps v. Wendt, 30 N.W.2d 89, 251 Wis. 603.—Olson v. (2) As more fully stated, if there is any credible evidence which in any reasonable view fairly admits of an inference that supports the jury's findings, the trial court may not change the jury's findings.—Rieschl v. Wisconsin Michigan Power Co., 294 N.W. 521, 236 Wis. 116.—Elkey v. Elkey, 290 N.W. 627, 284 Wis. 149, motion denied 282 N.W. 300, 234 Wis. 149.—Homerding v. Evidence presenting jury question

(1) Where the evidence presents a question for the jury on a particular issue, the court may not change the jury's finding on such issue.—Myers v. Ihde, 22 N.W.2d 603, 248 Wis. 604.—Lutzenberger v. Milwaukee Elec. Ry. & Light Co., 271 N.W. 409, 224 Wis. 44.—Earl v. Napp, 261 N.W. 400, 218 Wis. 433.—Buckley v. Brooks, 258 N.W. 614, 217 Wis. 287.

(2) If evidence is conflicting or if inferences to be drawn from the credible evidence are doubtful and uncertain, and there is any credible evidence, which under any reasonable view will support or admit of an inference either for or against the claim or contention of any party, then the rule that the proper inference to be drawn therefrom is a question for the jury, should be firmly adhered to, and court should not assume to answer such question by substituting another answer after the verdict is returned.—Schoenberg v. Berger, 42 N.W.2d 466, 257 Wis. 100.—Rieschl v. Wisconsin Michigan Power Co., 294 N.W. 521, 236 Wis. 116.—Webster v. Krembs, 282 N.W. 564, 230 Wis. 252.—Jensen v. Co., 267 N.W. 326, 222 Wis. 311, mandate modified on other grounds 268 N.W. 872, 222 Wis. 311.—Heaney v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 252 N.W. 173, 213 Wis. 670.

Finding against preponderance of evidence

(1) Fact that trial court considered jury's finding against the preponderance of the evidence would not warrant changing the finding.—Webster v. Krembs, 282 N.W. 564, 230 Wis. 252.—Bohner v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 248 N.W. 421, 211 Wis. 501.

(2) Even though the finding is considered against the clear preponderance of the evidence, the court is not required to change the finding.—Thorp v. Landsaw, 35 N.W.2d 307, 254 Wis. 1, followed in Wigchers v. Landsaw, 35 N.W.2d 457, 254 Wis. 1.

Duty of trial court to change

(1) The trial court has a duty to change special findings of the jury not supported by the evidence.—Lurie v. Nickel, 289 N.W. 686, 233 Wis. 420.—Baird v. Edmonds, 276 N.W. 306, 226 Wis. 209.

(2) However, failure of the court to change the jury's finding on an issue not submitted has been held to be immaterial.—Brennan v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co., 265 N.W. 207, 220 Wis. 316.

Where plaintiff is entitled to recover as matter of law, irrespective of jury's answer to certain issues, judgment will not be upset because judge struck out answer to issues and substituted answer of his own.—Bundy v. Sutton, 177 S.E. 420, 207 N.C. 422.

Finding "incredible"

Evidence of motorist who survived collision with automobile of deceased that deceased had invaded his side of the highway was in such direct conflict with the established physical facts that it was "incredible" and where there was no other evidence to support the finding of the jury that deceased was negligent, trial court should have granted the motion to change answers to questions to jury to deny a recovery to the surviving motorist.—Strnad v. Co-operative Ins. Mutual, 40 N.W.2d 552, 256 Wis. 261.

Apportionment of negligence

(1) While courts are reluctant to change jury's determination on apportionment of negligence, they do so where court considers as a matter of law, that plaintiff's negligence is as great as that of defendant, but where jury has not so apportioned the negligence.

U.S.—Cherney v. Holmes, C.A.Wis., 185 F.2d 718.

flucts in material respects in the jury's answers or findings.⁵⁹ However, where the intention of the jury is clear, the court may amend a special verdict or finding so as to remedy or correct a defect or error which is manifestly clerical or formal or the result of mistake or inadvertence;⁶⁰ it may compute and insert, during the term at which the special verdict is returned, the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled under the verdict;⁶¹ and it may make findings on an issue not submitted, and not requested to be submitted, to the jury.⁶²

Procedure and manner of setting aside, amending, and correcting. Statutes governing the manner of correcting a defective verdict must be observed.⁶³ The trial court cannot set aside a special verdict or finding summarily,⁶⁴ but can only do so on strict compliance with all of the conditions required.⁶⁵ Where proper grounds therefor exist, the court may amend or correct the special verdict or findings of the jury on proper motion by the party affected.⁶⁶ A statute limiting the time for filing a motion to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial does not limit the time within which the court may in a proper case substitute its findings for those of the jury.⁶⁷

b. Resubmission to Jury

In some instances issues, questions, or interrogatories may be resubmitted and the jury sent out again under apt instructions to remedy or correct defects or errors in their original answers, findings, or verdict, but the authority to adopt this procedure is very limited, and it should not be adopted where there is no reason therefor.

In some instances issues, questions, or interrogatories may be resubmitted and the jury sent out again under apt instructions to remedy or correct defects or errors in their original answers, findings, or verdict.⁶⁸ This is true where the special verdict is informal;⁶⁹ the jury have not answered certain questions or interrogatories, as discussed supra § 560; or where they have given answers

(2) The evidence in a number of cases has been held to authorize or require changing the jury's answer or finding on the apportionment of negligence.—Carr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 43 N.W.2d 461, 257 Wis. 315.—Schlewitz v. London & Lancashire Indem. Co. of America, 38 N.W.2d 700, 255 Wis. 296.—Carley v. Jewett, 34 N.W.2d 779, 253 Wis. 680.—*Lurie v. (3) However, where jury found both parties causally negligent in designated respects and proportion of negligence attributable to plaintiff to be a certain per cent, action of trial court in changing jury's answers so as to find plaintiff causally negligent contrary to jury's answer, and increasing proportion of negligence attributable to plaintiff has been held erroneous where jury was not properly instructed as to the manner in which to determine the amount of causal negligence attributable to each party.—*Volkman v. 66. Due consideration of motion

Where there were inconsistencies and conflicts in material respects in jury's answers to special interrogatories, there was occasion for due consideration and an appropriate and timely judicial determination by trial court of issues raised by plaintiff's motion for changes in jury's answers.—Brown v. Erb, 46 N.W.2d 329, 258 Wis. 444.

Amendment of motion

Denial of defendants' application for permission to amend motions after verdict for purpose of requesting court to change answers to certain questions of special verdict was discretionary, where original motions after verdict and memorandum decision of trial court plainly indicated that matters sought to be raised by defendants had been fully considered

Rule against additional instructions not violated

Oral statement of court in response to question by foreman as to whether jury might change its answers to other issues than those relating to conflict pointed out in written instructions, to effect that it would be permissible for them to change the answer to any of the issues they might desire to change, did not give jury any additional instructions on law of the case in violation of rules.—*Traders & General Ins. which are insufficient,⁷⁰ incomplete,⁷¹ incorrect,⁷² improper,⁷³ irregular,⁷⁴ evasive,⁷⁵ indefinite, uncertain,⁷⁶ or not sufficiently clear,⁷⁷ contradictory,⁷⁸ show a misconception of the questions,⁷⁹ or are unresponsive.⁸⁰ However, the authority to adopt this procedure is very limited;⁸¹ it should not be adopted where there is no reason therefor;⁸² and the jury should not be allowed or required to reverse their findings on vital issues of fact⁸³ depending on the evidence.⁸⁴ In some cases a reconsideration of the answer to one issue may necessitate the reconsideration of the answer to another issue.⁸⁵

Clerk of court is without authority to direct the jury to retire and reconsider the case.⁸⁶

Answers not called for by instructions

Where jury answered several questions which verdict directed them to answer only in case of affirmative answer to another question which jury answered in negative, court's sending jury back after calling attention to form of verdict and instructing jury to read verdict and see whether any correction was desired held not error.—Jackson v. Robert L. Reisinger & Co., 263 N.W. 641, 219 Wis. 535.

After one juror during polling of jury stated that he did not exactly understand question submitting special issue, action of court in allowing jury to retire and return a corrected answer held not error.—Farmer v. Central Mut. Ins. Co. of Chicago, Ill., 67 P.2d 511, 145 Kan. 951.

Intent obtainable from answer

(1) A trial court has no authority to require a jury to revise or reframe their answer to an interrogatory where the intention of the jury may be obtained from the answer given, since such answers are to be construed liberally.—Bradley v. Mansfield Rapid Transit, 93 N.E.2d 672, 154 Ohio St. 154.—Elio v. Akron Transp. Co., 71 N.E.2d 707, 147 Ohio St. 363.

(2) So, where a jury returns a general verdict for one of the parties and answers to special interrogatories submitted to it, and where such answers, although inconsistent with the general verdict, when liberally construed, show the intention of the jury, it is error for trial court to authorize jury to revise or reframe their answers or to indicate to the jury the answers to be returned.—Bradley v. Mansfield Rapid Transit, supra.

New verdict not permitted

Where there has been a mistake in an answer to an issue, so that it does not express the actual agreement of the jury, judge may allow them to correct it, but it must be the correction of verdict rendered, and not the rendering of a new verdict simply because the jury were not satisfied with what they had done.—Livingston v. or even after they have separated,⁹⁰ provided nothing has occurred between their separation and re-assembling to disturb their impartiality and fair-mindedness.⁹¹ It has been held that a resubmission may not be made after the jury have been finally discharged and released from their oaths;⁹² but it has also been held otherwise where the discharge was almost instantly recalled and the sole purpose of the resubmission is to require the jury to reduce to writing the answers or special verdict on which they have previously agreed.⁹³

§ 568. Venire de Novo

At common law a venire de novo is sometimes granted after a special verdict, but always for some cause apparent on the record, as where the special verdict is imperfect by reason of some uncertainty or ambiguity or by finding less than the whole matter put in issue, and the common-law rules may be rendered inapplicable by reason of statutory provisions.

At common law a venire de novo is sometimes granted after special verdict,⁹⁴ but always for some cause apparent on the record,⁹⁵ as where the special verdict is imperfect by reason of some uncertainty or ambiguity,⁹⁶ or by finding less than the whole matter put in issue,⁹⁷ or by not assessing damages,⁹⁸ or where by reason of some other unamendable defect, judgment cannot be entered.⁹⁹ A motion for a venire de novo cannot be based on the refusal of the trial court to allow the complaint to be amended to conform to the evidence,¹ or the refusal to direct a special verdict,² and it has been held that the fact that a challenge to the array is improperly denied will not of itself entitle a party to a venire de novo.³ Indeed, it has been held that a venire de novo may properly be granted only where there is some defect in the special verdict or finding itself,⁴ and it has been declared that the office of a motion for a venire de novo is to test the sufficiency of the special finding to sustain the conclusions of law, or of the special verdict to sustain a judgment,⁵ and not to determine whether or not the findings are within the issues.⁶ The common-law rule authorizing a venire de novo where less than the whole matter put in issue is found may be rendered inapplicable by reason of statutory provisions under which the failure to find expressly on an issue is equivalent to a negative finding,⁷ and thereunder if mistakes have been made by finding less than all the matters in issue, or in finding facts to exist that were not proved, the remedy is not by venire de novo,⁸ but by motion for a new trial, as discussed in New Trial § 64. Where, however, a special verdict or finding shows that the evidentiary facts, and not the ultimate facts, have been found, and it appears that such evidentiary facts are sufficient to establish the ultimate facts alleged in the complaint it has been held that a venire de novo should be ordered.⁹

Action of court amounting to setting aside verdict

a. In General

Special verdicts, findings, or answers to interrogatories are to be construed liberally with a view to ascertaining the intention of the jury, and the clear, natural, and necessary meaning of the language used will govern.

Special verdicts, findings or answers to interrogatories are generally to be construed liberally¹⁰ with a view to ascertaining the intention of the jury,¹¹ however unskillfully such meaning may be expressed;¹² but, as discussed supra § 564, no inference, presumption, or intendment will be included in aid of special findings or answers to special interrogatories as against the general verdict. Substance, rather than form, is to be considered;¹³ and the clear,¹⁴ natural¹⁵ and necessary meaning of the language used will govern;¹⁶ but where more than one reasonable construction is possible, the trial court may adopt the one it deems proper¹⁷ and most cogent.¹⁸ It must be borne in mind that the jury may employ a term in its common, rather than its technically correct, sense;¹⁹ and the findings should be held to have the meaning that the average juror would understand them to have.²⁰

Construction of "commenced"

Jury's special finding that insured under group life and disability policy was totally and permanently disabled as of date of trial, and that such total permanent disability "commenced" in January, 1933, meant that disability became total and permanent in January, 1933, so as to entitle insured to disability benefits as of that date, as against contention that word "commenced" did not mean that insured was totally and permanently disabled in January, 1933.—Connecticut General Life Ins. Where only one special issue was submitted to jury upon affirmative defense, it must be given effect and its answer given effect, if under rules of law it is possible to do so, though issue contained mixed question of law and fact which could have been more clearly separated.—*Hancock v. (2) Where some of the well-known essential elements of estoppel were not embraced within special issues submitted to jury, special findings could not create an estoppel as a matter of law on ground that issue was tried out by consent of parties.—

Hypothetical statement. A matter is not found as a substantive fact where it is stated in a special verdict merely as a hypothesis on which a conclusion of the jury is based.²⁵

Expression of doubt of the existence of a fact is not tantamount to a finding of the existence of the fact.²⁶

"We don't know" or other similar answer is equivalent to "no"²⁷ or to a finding that the party on whom the burden of proof rests has failed in his proof,²⁸ unless the failure of proof is offset by a presumption.²⁹ In at least one jurisdiction, however, such an answer is considered as really amounting to nothing,³⁰ although an answer of "no evidence" by the jury to a special interrogatory amounts to a finding against the party having the burden of proving the facts inquired about,³¹ and such answers have been upheld as good against objections that they are evasive and improper.³²

Construction against party. A special verdict will be construed most strongly against the party on whom rests the burden of proof,³³ and a special finding received without objection is construed most strongly against the party in whose favor it is found.³⁴ Where an interrogatory is ambiguous and susceptible of two different meanings it must be construed against the party drawing it.³⁵

Lewis v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 198 S.W.2d 598, error dismissed.

Findings on issues submitted

Lights

In action for death of motorist who ran into rear of parked truck at night, on ground that truck was not lighted, jury's answer to special question inquiring whether lights were burning on back of truck at time of collision, that it was "doubtful" was required to be interpreted as a finding that the lights were burning.—Brittain v. Answers construed

(1) In action for personal injuries and property damage allegedly resulting from explosion of natural gas in plaintiff's basement, jury's answer "not to our knowledge" to question whether defendant had any notice of escape or leakage of gas from its main prior and subsequent to certain dates established merely that there was no evidence that defendant made any test between such dates to determine extent of leaking gas and was not a finding that gas ceased to leak from main as soon as certain test was completed.—Davis v. Kansas Elec. Power Co., 152 P.2d 806, 159 Kan. 97.

(2) In action for death of automobile guest by plaintiff suing as widow and coheir of guest, plaintiff was not entitled to recover where jury answered "No knowledge" to special question as to whether guest had been divorced from wife to whom he had been previously married, since such answer was equivalent to finding that there had been no divorce.—Darrington v. finding or verdict is ambiguous, the court may examine the record to ascertain the intention of the jury.⁴²

Where evidence establishes facts

(1) Where jury made affirmative findings in answering certain issues, but findings were not of significance since evidence conclusively established facts to be true, questions became matters of law.—Faubian v. Busch, Tex.Civ.App., 240 S.W.2d 861, refused no reversible error.

(2) Issues established by undisputed evidence are available in support of the judgment, the same as issues established by the jury's verdict.—Woods v. Osborn, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 636.

42. Tex.—Vincent v. Bell, Civ.App., 22 S.W.2d 753—Gibson v. Dickson, Civ.App., 178 S.W. 44.

Proper basis for judgment

Where the findings on special issues are ambiguous court may examine not only the issues submitted but also the pleadings and the evidence in order to arrive at their proper interpretation, and such verdict so construed constitutes the proper basis for a judgment.—State v. Hale, 146 S.W.2d 731, 136 Tex. 29.

Making own findings

In action to recover salary claimed to be due and to obtain reinstatement to position of night policeman, where both sides moved for directed verdict, special verdict that plaintiff did not, with full knowledge of facts, refuse to resume his duties as policeman, was ambiguous and under record court was bound to make its own findings of fact.—Schoonover v. City of Viroqua, 14 N.W.2d 9, 245 Wis. 239.

§ 571. — Conclusiveness and Effect

A special finding by the jury is binding on, and may not be ignored by, the court, provided it is relevant and material to the issues, is warranted by the evidence, does not contain an unwarranted conclusion of law, and has not been set aside on proper grounds.

Consideration together of issues and answers thereto see infra § 569.

Error in issue held not cured by other issue

(1) In general.—Gordon v. McIntosh, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 177.

(2) Where the rule that a special issue should not assume the existence of any material fact is violated, fact that the assumed fact has been separately submitted does not correct the error, unless the submission was conditional, since the parties are entitled to have issues submitted to the jury without any suggestion or assumption as to the truth of the facts involved.—Sinclair Nav. Co. v.

Kremlick, Tex.Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 758.

(3) Submission of issue of abandonment of the homestead under instruction that incorrectly defined abandonment was not rendered harmless by the fact that affirmative submission of the plaintiffs' case by necessary implication negated the defensive issue of abandonment.—Cooper Co. v. Warwick, Tex.Civ.App., 120

In absence of motion

It has been held to be beyond the authority of the trial court to disregard the jury's fact finding on the theory that it was not supported by the evidence where no motion for judgment non obstante verdicto was made.—Christopherson v. Whittlesey, Tex.Civ.App., 197 S.W.2d 384, error refused no reversible error.

Disregarding immaterial findings as surplusage see supra § 565.

Absence of defense on merits

In suit on note, to foreclose deed of trust lien, and in nature of bill of review attacking dismissal for failure to prosecute a prior suit for similar relief, jury's finding, in response to special issues, that plaintiff had not been diligent in prosecuting the prior suit or in learning of the dismissal, was not controlling and did not require judgment for defendant or preclude judgment for plaintiff when there was no defense on the merits.—Clark v. Sayre Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 204 S.W.2d 141, error refused no reversible error.

Answer to preceding interrogatory

An answer to an interrogatory which depends upon an affirmative answer to a preceding interrogatory should be disregarded where the preceding interrogatory is answered in the negative.—White v. Shircliff Industries, Inc., Ind.App., 112 N.E.2d 838.

Discovered peril

(1) Where the jury finds issue of discovered peril in favor of injured party, the issues of primary negligence and contributory negligence become immaterial.—Montgomery v. Houston Elec. Co., 144 S.W.2d 251, 135 Tex. 538—Kimbly v. Comet Motor Freight Lines, Tex.Civ.App., 169 S.W.2d 760—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Acker, Tex.Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 508, error dismissed, judgment correct—Dallas Ry. & T. Co. v. Bankston, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 304.

(2) Liability under doctrine of "discovered peril" involves an independent ground of recovery based on negligence, and unless discovered peril involves an independent ground of recovery the questions concerning primary negligence and contributory negligence could never be rendered immaterial by findings on issues of discovered peril.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Bishop, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 298.

(3) In an action involving co-defendants, findings of discovered peril against one does not render issue of primary negligence immaterial with respect to the other defendant where the peril was not discovered by him.—Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. McKinney, 145 S.W.2d 1081, 136 Tex. 75.

Issues under pleadings

Finding could not be disregarded on ground that the condition in contract was not pleaded where party was entitled to have such issue submitted under general denial.—Brown v. Neyland, Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 838, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds Neyland v. Brown, 170 S.W.2d 207, 141 Tex. 253, reheard 172 S.W.2d 89, 141 Tex. 253.

Issues not covered

(1) A finding on an issue does not require the court to disregard evidence not covered by that issue.—Younger Bros. v. Ross, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 621, error dismissed.

(2) Finding of jury against plaintiff as to one issue does not require rejection of plaintiff's evidence in toto or vitiate verdict found in his favor as to other matters.—Smith v. Turnipseed, 160 S.E. 877, 44 Ga.App. 220.

(3) A finding on a motorist's high and dangerous rate of speed is not necessarily conclusive of the question of whether motorist had his automobile under proper control.—Blaugrund v. Glash, Civ.App., 179 S.W.2d 257, affirmed 179 S.W.2d 266, 143 Tex. 378.

mined by the court, a special verdict does not necessarily dispose of the case.⁵³ It is the recorded verdict which controls;⁵⁴ a special verdict not received by the court and forming no part of the record is not evidence of any fact found by it,⁵⁵ and cannot be used by the court for any purpose.⁵⁶

On parties. A special finding or answer is conclusive, as between the parties, as to the facts found,⁵⁷ where they are supported by the evidence,⁵⁸ are material to the issues,⁵⁹ and have not been set aside.⁶⁰ It is binding on a party, at whose instance or with whose consent, the question was submitted to the jury,⁶¹ as well as a party who has agreed to be bound,⁶² and the party against whom the finding was made, where he has not taken proper steps to have it set aside.⁶³

In at least one jurisdiction, where several acts are treated as grounds for the action a special finding by the jury of a particular act or acts of which defendant is guilty absolves defendant from all other acts so charged,⁶⁴ unless the findings construed as a whole compel a conclusion to the contrary,⁶⁵ and this rule has been applied to findings on grounds of defense.⁶⁶

Person not party

Jury's finding that bus passenger's release of claim for damages for injuries was void did not bind defendant's insurer not party to suit.—South Plains Coaches v. Behringer, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 1003, affirmed Behringer v. South Plains Coaches, Com.App., 13 S.W.2d 334.

Party consenting to answer

Where buyer admitted receipt of round forms purchased from sellers and admitted the purchase price he agreed to pay and permitted such matter to be embodied in first issue of sellers' action for balance due on price and consented that issue be answered in affirmative, nothing else appearing, sellers, on facts established in that issue, were prima facie entitled to recover purchase price.—Price v. Failure to question finding

Where husband in written motion for a new trial of divorce suit did not question special finding of jury that husband had been guilty of extreme and repeated cruelty towards wife as charged in complaint, he was conclusively bound by such findings.—Blair v. Blair, 93 N.E.2d 95, 341 Ill. App. 93.

Specific acts of negligence

Where question put to jury asked for specification of each and every act of negligence of which they find the defendant guilty, and answer was no warning signs of any kind, such answer did not absolve defendant from all other grounds of negligence pleaded where negligence found by answer to that question was pleaded in petition.—Soden v. Bennett, 244 P. 2d 1204, 173 Kan. 142.

65. Kan.—Cole v. Shell Petroleum Corp., 86 P.2d 740, 149 Kan. 25.

On all of special findings

Where all of jury's special findings were open to the interpretation that jury meant that taxicab driver in ample time, could have seen automobile approaching intersection, had he looked, to enable him to stop taxicab before collision, and that it constituted negligence for taxicab driver to enter intersection without having looked, one special finding that taxicab company's negligence consisted of taxicab driver's failure to use the highest degree of care and skill on entering intersection did not establish that taxicab company was not guilty of negligence.—Taggart v. Yellow Cab Co. of Wichita, 151 P.2d 924, 156 Kan. 88.

Other grounds fairly included

The fact that in answering a special question submitted to it regarding alleged negligence states one ground thereof does not preclude reliance on another ground alleged in the petition and fairly included in the answers to the other questions submitted.—Dick's Transfer Co. v. Miller, 119 P.2d 454, 154 Kan. 574.

66. Defense of fraudulent representations

Where fraudulent representations were relied upon as a defense in suit on note, finding as to a specific fraudulent representation had legal effect

On jury. Jurors will not be allowed to impeach their special verdict or findings.⁶⁷

As general or special verdict. Findings of fact in answer to special interrogatories which determine and cover all the material ultimate facts may together constitute and be treated as a special verdict.⁶⁸ A general finding in favor of defendant is a finding of each issuable fact necessary to sustain the general judgment.⁶⁹ The court cannot treat, as a general verdict, a verdict that shows that the jury did not intend it as such;⁷⁰ but a finding covering all the issues may be treated as a general verdict,⁷¹ particularly where the law authorizes only a general verdict.⁷² Separate general findings on separate causes of action are general verdicts.⁷³

§ 572. Objections and Waiver Thereof

Objections to issues, questions, or interrogatories submitted to the jury for answers or findings are waived or not available unless made in a proper manner at a seasonable time; also, objections to the jury's answers or failure to answer are waived when not properly and seasonably made.

Objections to issues, questions, or interrogatories submitted to the jury for answers or findings are waived or not available unless made⁷⁴ in a proper manner⁷⁵ and are waived or not available unless Objections made first time on appeal see Appeal and Error §§ 309, 332, 335, 382.

Objections held waived

(1) Where no objection was made by counsel for defendant at time of oral arguments wherein plaintiff's counsel mentioned special interrogatories to jury, or when the interrogatories were read, on ground that the interrogatories were not submitted to counsel before argument as required by statute, presumption of regularity of proceedings, aided by the conduct of counsel for defendant, negative a breach of the statute.—Racine Fuel Co. v. Rawlins, 36 N.E.2d 710, 377 Ill. 375.

(2) Failure to object to conditional submission of special issues constitutes a waiver.—Colls v. Price's Creameries, Tex.Civ.App., 244 S.W.2d 900, error refused no reversible error

—Ralcomb v. Vasquez, Civ.App., 241 S.W.2d 650, refused no reversible error.—Whiteside v. Tackett, Civ.App., 229 S.W.2d 908, error dismissed.

(3) Where special issue may not have been as broad as plaintiff's testimony but plaintiff did not object to sufficiency of issue to submit the question, any variance between issue and proof was immaterial.—Morgan v. Young, Tex.Civ.App., 203 S.W.2d 837, error refused no reversible error.

(4) Ordinarily a special issue so framed as to assume a fact, and which is not objected to on that account, is binding on the parties that the fact assumed to be true is true.—Neinast v. Hill, Tex.Civ.App., 206 S.W.2d 625.

(5) Where special issue as to value of crops at time of sale was submitted and party made no objection and did not request submission of an issue as to value of crops after sale and when they had matured, party waived any issue concerning value of crops at time of maturity.—Rest v. Best, Tex.Civ.App., 214 S.W.2d 806.

(6) Error, if any, in submitting to jury a question of defendant's negligence, not pleaded by plaintiff in personal injury suit, was waived by defendant, in absence of objection by him to such submission.—Lind v. Lund, 63 N.W.2d 313, 266 Wis. 232.

Necessity of constructive objection

Application of rules of procedure

If court submits a controlling issue of recovery or defense relied upon by the opposite party or attempts to give a definition or explanatory charge even though unsatisfactory and incorrect, parties are within the civil procedure rule relating to objections and the only duty required of the party is to except to the issue in language sufficiently clear to call the attention of the court to such error.—Lurie v. City of Houston, Civ.App., 220 S.W.2d 320, reversed on other grounds City of Houston v. Lurie, 224 S.W.2d 871, 148 Tex. 391, 14 A.L.R.2d 61—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Purpose of objection

The primary purpose of an objection to a charge is to call the attention of the trial court to its insufficiency or incorrectness and to give the court an opportunity properly to submit such issues to the jury, and the manner in which it is done is of secondary importance, provided the defects in the charge are adequately brought to the attention of the court in time and in such manner that it can correct the error.—Owl Taxi Service v. Saludis, Tex. Civ.App., 122 S.W.2d 225, error dismissed.

Objections held sufficient

Tex.—Pappas v. Wright, Civ.App., 171 S.W.2d 536—Ibanez v. State, Civ. App., 118 S.W.2d 405.

Objections held insufficient

Bouchillon, Tex.Civ.App., 186 S.W.2d 1006, refused without merit—Southern Underwriters v. Boswell, Civ. App., 141 S.W.2d 442, affirmed 158 S.W.2d 280, 138 Tex. 255—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Ray, Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 80, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Objection that special question to jury was ambiguous did not raise objection that question allegedly called for a conclusion of law.—Jelf v. Cottonwood Falls Gas Co., 178 P.2d 992, 162 Kan. 713.

(3) Statement that an issue is too broad does not direct attention of court to question whether an issue is multifarious.—Mathis v. State, Tex. Civ.App., 258 S.W.2d 200, error refused no reversible error.

(4) Objection that special issue, without being coupled with other issues not included in charge, could not form basis of judgment, and that essential elements were left out of charge with respect to such issue, but which did not point out what elements were omitted or what other issues were necessary to establish liability, was insufficient to reach the alleged defect.—Cree v. Miller, Tex. Civ.App., 255 S.W.2d 565, refused no reversible error.

(5) If form of submission of defensive issue was not fundamentally erroneous and issue itself palpably erroneous, objection to its submission, which failed to demonstrate na-

the questions or interrogatories are answered by the jury;⁸⁰ and it is frequently held that they must be made at or before the submission of the issues, questions, or interrogatories to the jury.⁸¹

The failure to object to the submission of an immaterial issue cannot convert a finding on such an issue into a material finding,⁸² nor can the failure to object to issues involving questions of law empower the jury to decide such questions.⁸³ A party may object, in a proper manner, to the submission of the issues to the jury in such a way as does not require, or will prevent, answers to essential elements of his case.⁸⁴ Where no objections are made to the form of submission of a certain issue, a refusal by the court to submit the same issue in different, although more correct, form is not error.⁸⁵ Where the issues submitted are incompletely stated or improperly combined, in the absence of a proper objection pointing out to the court such defects, a verdict based thereon is as effective as if the issues were correctly submitted.⁸⁶ In jurisdictions where exceptions are required, if proper issues are not submitted to the jury after they have been submitted to the court, an exception should be reserved to the failure of the court to submit them.⁸⁷ So, also, exceptions should be taken to the submission to the jury of special issues objected to,⁸⁸ but the exceptions must be sufficient distinctly to point out the defects urged.⁸⁹

Objections to the jury's answers or failure to answer are waived when not made⁹⁰ in proper man-

ture of error inhibitive of issue or prejudice likely to be resultant from its submission, was insufficient.—Driver v. Worth Const. Co., Tex.Civ. App., 264 S.W.2d 174, error granted.

Objections after jury's retirement

(1) Objection made to submission of interrogatories after jury had retired to deliberate upon their verdict was not timely.—Minninger v. New York Cent. R. R., 169 N.E.2d 104, 123 Ind.App. 338.

(2) However, where the trial court made certain remarks concerning some of the interrogatories which constituted a passing upon the credibility of witnesses and weight of the testimony, objections thereto made by plaintiff's attorney immediately after jury had retired to deliberate were timely.—Minninger v. New York Cent. R. R., supra.

Essential elements of defense

It is incumbent on a party asserting an affirmative defense to see that the jury answers all essential elements of the defense in his favor, or to object to the submission of the case to the jury in such manner that an answer on an essential element will be prevented.—Little Rock Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Dunn, 222 S.W.2d 985, 148 Tex. 197.

Duty to object

While statute requires trial court to submit special issues separately and to define legal terms, it does not relieve party complaining from duty of making proper objections to charge so as to enable trial court to correct charge, if erroneous.—Rivers v. Westbrook, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W. 2d 46, error refused.

Exception held sufficient

Exception held insufficient

(1) Exceptions to special issues on ground that they amounted to submission of a general charge were not sufficient distinctly to point out, as required by rule of procedure, objection that charge failed to submit specific acts of negligence alleged.—Frozen Foods Exp. v. Odom, Tex.Civ. App., 229 S.W.2d 92, refused no reversible error.

Misconstruction of issue by jury

Where special issue was framed in negative and jury's answers to other issues indicated that jury misconstrued inquiry in giving answer adverse to plaintiff but plaintiff made no complaint concerning the matter and also misconstrued effect of inquiry and answer, plaintiff was bound by such answer.—Southland Life Ins. Co. v. Barrett, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W. 2d 997, error refused.

ner⁹¹ before the jury are discharged⁹² or, according to some authorities, on the rendition of the verdict.⁹³ While objections made for the first time on a motion for new trial are usually of no avail,⁹⁴ where the jury findings on special issues do not have support in evidence a motion to set aside and disregard such findings is proper.⁹⁵ Failure to make a motion to have the jury sent back for answers or better answers may operate as a waiver.⁹⁶

The absence of a general verdict is waived when not objected to at the time the trial court announces that only special issues will be submitted⁹⁷ or at the time the special findings are returned.⁹⁸ However, where there is no general verdict, a special verdict may be attacked at any time for failure to pass on all material and controverted questions.⁹⁹

Matters other than failure to object. A party may preclude himself from objecting to a special issue, verdict, finding, or answer by requesting,¹ or consenting to,² it, or moving for judgment thereon.³ However, the fact that a party requests submission of a special question does not deprive him of the privilege thereafter of urging a particular construction or significance thereof;⁴ the consent of a party that the jury may return an affirmative answer to one of the questions submitted is not an acquiescence in the sufficiency of the special verdict;⁵ and failure of a party to tender a proper charge is not a waiver of the right to object to the manner in which an issue is submitted.⁶

§ 573. Filing

Interrogatories and answers thereto should be filed as a part of the verdict.

Interrogatories and answers thereto should be filed as a part of the verdict.⁷

Objections held proper

Where issues submitted to jury were predicated on inadmissible evidence, objections that they were not supported by any proper evidence were good and jury's answers must be disregarded.—Patton v. Crews, Tex.Civ.App., 264 S.W.2d 467, error refused no reversible error.

Deficiency supplied

If special issue submitted in suit in trespass to try title for the title and possession of land, inquiring as to whether line as surveyed by specified person was true boundary line between parties, was not sufficient upon which to base judgment for plaintiffs, in absence of exception or objection thereto, the deficiency in finding of jury in favor of plaintiff on such issue would be supplied by a presumed finding of court in such manner as to support the judgment for plaintiffs where there was evidence to support such finding.—Dotson v. Statute interpreted

(1) In statute providing that a claim that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the submission of an issue may be complained of for the first time after verdict, the word "insufficient" is not used in the factual sense of insufficiency to support a finding which the jury has made.—Myers v. Crenshaw, 137 S.W.2d 7, 134 Tex. 500.

(2) Statute providing that a claim that evidence was insufficient to warrant submission of issue may be complained of for first time after verdict required more than blanket objection that there were no controverted issues of fact and therefore none should have been submitted.—Traders & General Ins. X. TRIAL BY COURT

A. HEARING AND DETERMINATION OF CAUSE

§ 574. In General

When a case is tried without a jury the judge occupies a dual position; he is the magistrate required to lay down correctly the guiding principle of law and he is also the tribunal compelled to determine what the facts are.

Trial of a law case to the court without the intervention of a jury, it has been said, is tantamount to the trial of a chancery case.⁸ When a case is tried without a jury the judge occupies a dual position; he is the magistrate required to lay down correctly the guiding principle of law, and he is also the tribunal compelled to determine what the facts are.⁹ Where the case is tried by the court without a jury, the court occupies the same relation to the facts in the case that a jury would have if the case had been tried by a jury,¹⁰ and the court is governed by the same legal principles as in trial by jury.¹¹ The powers of the judge remain the same as before, namely, to make rulings on questions of law,¹² and to exercise his discretion in allowing, disallowing, or limiting costs.¹³ However, the court has no other or additional powers in such case except such as belong to the judge and the jury in an ordinary case.¹⁴ There must be a strict compliance with statutes with respect to trials by the court without a jury.¹⁵

Except for those matters of which the court may take judicial notice, the deliberations of the trial judge are limited to the record made before him,¹⁶ and the determinative facts on which the rights of the party must be made to rest must be found from admissions made by parties, facts agreed on, stipulations entered into and noted at the hearing, and evidence offered in open court after all parties have been given full opportunity to be heard.¹⁷ Recourse may not be had to records, files, evidence, or data not thus presented to the court for consideration.¹⁸ A determination can be made without a hearing only in cases where the facts are not disputed,¹⁹ and the hearing must be founded on the pleadings.²⁰ When an indisputable fact appears on a hearing which makes necessary or proper the making of a certain order or the imposing of a certain condition, the court has the discretion to make the order or condition at once without waiting for counsel to conclude,²¹ and it may, during the trial, correct erroneous rulings to which objection has been made where no rule of procedure is thereby violated.²² So it may, in the exercise of its

At Special Term

A trial before a judge without a jury at Special Term does not differ, as a matter of substance, from a trial on the law side of the court before a judge without a jury.—Braunhut v. Rein, 268 N.Y.S. 665, 241 App.Div. 622.

discretion, set aside the submission of a case for judgment in order to permit the placing of an answer on file.²³

Attorney representing adverse interests. An attorney may not represent the adverse interests of opposing litigants in a cause of action, as discussed in Attorney and Client § 47, so that in a nonjury trial a finding by the trial judge cannot be sustained where the attorney has represented such adverse interests.²⁴

Trial without issue. In actions tried by the court without a jury, a trial without an issue is erroneous and determines nothing,²⁵ and the judgment binds neither party.²⁶

Submission before setting case for trial. Submission of a suit to annul a marriage on the ground that defendant had fraudulently represented that she had been divorced from a former husband is not premature, where the wife admitted that she had not been divorced from a previous husband, although the case had not been set for trial.²⁷

Changing theory of case. After a case has been tried and submitted on one theory, the court will not permit resubmission on an entirely different theory against the other party's objection.²⁸

Inviting other judge to sit in case. It is error for the court to invite another judge, who had not heard the testimony, to sit with him during the argument of a case, and to consult with such judge with respect to it.²⁹

§ 575. Use of General or Personal Knowledge

Where the cause is tried without a jury, the trial judge cannot, in deciding issues of fact, act on his special individual knowledge as to matters which are not of common knowledge.

Where a cause is tried by a court without a jury, the trial judge has the right to draw on the knowledge he possesses in common with the generality of mankind to the same extent that a jury could,³⁰ but he cannot, in deciding the issues of fact, act on his special individual knowledge as to matters which are not of common knowledge.³¹ The personal knowledge of the judge who tries the case cannot meet the requirements of the law that proof of necessary facts shall be made.³² However, in particular cases it has been held that the judge may utilize his personal knowledge,³³ especially where the evidence is conflicting.³⁴

Reference to books and publications. A court may refer to encyclopedias, dictionaries, and scientific publications for the purpose of refreshing recollection or for material which will assist in the clarification or interpretation of evidence.³⁵

§ 576. Hearing Argument of Counsel

Where the case is tried to the court, it has very generally been held that the matter of permitting argument is within the sound discretion of the court.

Although it has been held that counsel may not be deprived of the right to argue the case to the court,³⁶ where the case is tried to the court it has very generally been held that the matter of permitting argument is within the sound discretion of the court,³⁷ but it has been said that, where there is room for argument, it would be the better practice to permit it.³⁸ There is no abuse of discretion in refusing to listen to argument of counsel where the court is satisfied as to the evidence and the law applicable to the matter in issue,³⁹ or where no controverted question of fact is involved, but only the construction and determination of the scope and effect of a plain, unambiguous statute.⁴⁰ A party may waive his right to object to a failure to hear arguments,⁴¹ and where a party fails to present requests for findings, as he is authorized to do by a court rule, he waives any objection for refusal of the trial judge to hear argument of counsel at the close of the hearing.⁴² Where argument is permitted, the extent to which it should go is largely in the discretion of the court.⁴³ Argument to the court is not objectionable merely because it would have been so if it had been directed to a jury.⁴⁴ A referee should decline to record unprofessional statements of counsel and scandalous objections.⁴⁵

Reargument. A referee may allow a reargument before making his report,⁴⁶ but not thereafter.⁴⁷

Briefs. A court will refuse to consider a brief submitted by mail from an attorney in another county where no local appearance has been entered and where it is an unwritten rule of the court not to permit cases to be submitted on briefs but to insist on argument.⁴⁸ A referee has power to enlarge the time for the submission of briefs to him in the same manner as he would have the power to postpone the oral argument of the cause on the day fixed.⁴⁹ Where, at trial, it was agreed that briefs of parties would cover certain questions, but the party who filed the first brief failed to concern himself with such questions, the briefs will be treated as abandoned.⁵⁰

Permitting particular argument held not error

Where plaintiff insisted on arguing failure of consideration as well as illegality of contract as grounds for recovery of money paid under contract, trial court did not err in permitting defendant to argue his defense on the merits as though there were no claim that contract was void.—Carolyn Mfg. to the jury if the case had been tried by a jury.⁵¹ Every trial judge should listen, hear, and from the evidence determine the issues raised by the pleadings,⁵² and his manner should not be such as to prevent a full presentation of all the relevant evidence.⁵³ He should not prejudge the issues,⁵⁴ but should keep an open mind until all the evidence is presented to him,⁵⁵ and he is bound to refrain from forming an opinion on issues of fact until case is finally submitted to him.⁵⁶ Thus a statement of the court before plaintiff's counsel had opportunity to cross-examine one defendant, that he was satisfied that defendants were not liable, has been held error.⁵⁷

While the trial judge should maintain orderly procedure,⁵⁸ he is not a mere functionary whose sole purpose is to preserve order and lend ceremonial dignity to the proceedings.⁵⁹ He has the right and the duty, within reasonable limits, to bring out the facts in the case before him clearly, so that important functions of his office may be fairly and justly performed.⁶⁰ However, the trial judge should be patient with litigant and counsel, and be not only fair but appear to be fair and sympathetic toward any litigant or witness attempting to impress the merits of his cause or the sincerity of his testimony,⁶¹ and it is improper for him to adopt a belligerent attitude toward either party or to take the conduct of the trial out of the hands of the attorney.⁶² Since it is the duty of counsel to refrain from encumbering the record with incompetent, immaterial, or irrelevant testimony, the trial judge during the trial may indicate his views when the attorneys are so doing.⁶³ While it is error if a statement of the judge shows that he has misconceived the law,⁶⁴ it is not improper, as prejudging the case, for the judge to announce during the progress of the trial the essential legal principles involved,⁶⁵ or to express his opinion on the merits of the litigation.⁶⁶ Severe criticism of plaintiff's testimony as a witness in his own behalf as being unsatisfactory cannot be held misconduct where the judge allowed part of plaintiff's claim, which had been disallowed in its entirety by a referee.⁶⁷ Oral comments by the trial judge, in deciding the case, on the informality of a transaction by which, it was claimed, without any written transfer a father made a gift to his son of a note for a large amount executed by the son and secured by a mortgage, do not show that the judge believed the evidence insufficient in law to support a gift or that his finding against a gift was based on an erroneous view of the law.⁶⁸ The trial judge may inquire of counsel as to the issues made in the case.⁶⁹

Statement of reasons for rulings on evidence

Trial judge in passing on questions of law with respect to admissibility of evidence, motions to strike, etc., may properly announce reasons on which he predicates his rulings, although by so doing he necessarily expresses an opinion on evidence already introduced, since such expressions are not expressions on ultimate facts to be found but are mere expressions of tentative opinions for benefit and guidance of counsel.—Ries v. Encouragement of settlement. Efforts on the part of the trial judge to encourage settlement out of court ordinarily are to be commended,⁷⁰ although such efforts should never be so directed as to compel either litigant to make a forced settlement.⁷¹

§ 578. Submission of Cause on Case Stated

The parties to an action may submit it to the court on a case stated, which is a method of presenting a case for a decision on its merits by which the parties agree on all the material ultimate facts on which the rights of the parties are to be determined by law.

The parties to an action may submit it to the court on a case stated,⁷² which is a method of presenting a case for a decision on its merits by which the parties agree on all the material ultimate facts on which the rights of the parties are to be determined by law.⁷³ It is essential to a case stated that there be a pending action to support it; if there is no action there can be no judgment.⁷⁴ When properly drawn, it is like an issue developed by special pleading, and it presents in a single point, or in a series of points, beyond which the court cannot go, the very matter that is up for judgment.⁷⁵ It is in the nature of a special verdict,⁷⁶ and it should contain a clear statement of the facts agreed on which give rise to the question presented for decision, and nothing should be left to inference.⁷⁷ It is essential to a case stated that all the material facts be agreed on and set forth in the statement so that the court may have nothing to do but pronounce the law arising out of them,⁷⁸ and whatever is not distinctly and expressly agreed on, and set forth as admitted, must be taken not to exist,⁷⁹ or is presumed kept out of the case stated

Efforts held proper

Action of trial judge in suggesting a compromise before plaintiff had rested its case did not establish that defendant was deprived of a fair trial because trial court had prejudged the case where trial proceeded and defendant's case was fully presented.—Empire Steel Bldg. Co. v. Harvey Mach. Co., 265 P.2d 32, 122 Cal.App.2d 411.

Duty of judge and attorney

The dignity and power of federal judge and of attorney in court are equal within sphere of their respective duties, and judge must not compel agreement by arbitrary use of his power and attorney must not meekly submit to judge's suggestion, though suggestion be strongly urged.—Brooks v. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., C.C.A.Cal., 92 F.2d 794.

Purpose of a case stated

A case stated is resorted to for convenience and to save expense of a trial and its purpose being, not to make evidence for a jury, but to supersede the action of a jury, by imparting to facts ascertained by consent the judicial certainty requisite to enable the court to pass on the law, and render judgment on the whole.—Russell v. School Dist. of Westtown, Pa.Com.Pl., 4 Chest.Co. 453.

Report of an auditor

The report of an auditor whose findings of fact are to be final constitutes a case stated.—Kennedy v.

Distinguished from trial without jury

The distinction between a case stated and a trial without jury is that in the former case the parties submit an agreed statement of facts for the judgment of the court, subject to appeal if that right has been reserved, whereas in the latter case admitted facts are submitted for the decision of the court subject to exceptions and their review by the court before any judgment is entered.—Aufrecht v. 64 C.J. p 1191 note 99.

Inference unwarranted

In action on a case stated by receiver of foreign insolvent bank against domestic stockholder for double liability, inference that bank was organized under prior state constitution, creating doubt as to double liability, was unwarranted where stipulation contained nothing to show that bank was incorporated before adoption of present state constitution imposing double liability.—Lawhead v. Craig, 172 A. 104, 318 Pa. 49.

The law of another state is a material fact which must be embodied in the case stated unless the parties avail themselves of the provisions of the Uniform Judicial Notice of Foreign Law Act.—Howell v. Kline, Pa. Com.Pl., 29 North.Co. 221.

Proceeding not sustained as case stated

Proceeding whereby jury was discharged, judgment entered for defendant, and cause submitted to court on plaintiffs' motion for judgment non obstante verdicto for final determination on evidence which had been received or that should be received later could not be sustained as case stated, where facts were not agreed on, a necessary essential of a case stated.—Hagy v. Sharp, 177 A. 578, 117 Pa.Super. 187.

79. Pa.—Lawrence County v. Horner, 126 A. 783, 231 Pa. 336—Commonwealth v. Megargee Bros., 118 A. 541, 275 Pa. 12—Welch v. Oregon, for sufficient reason.⁸⁰ On the other hand, under statutory authority, the court may draw inferences⁸¹ unless the parties expressly agree that no inferences shall be drawn.⁸² A case stated in which there is one essential fact in dispute should be quashed.⁸³ It must disclose all the facts necessary to enable the court to render an intelligent judgment,⁸⁴ and it will be sufficient if it complies with this requirement.⁸⁵

In deciding the case the court is confined to the specific facts stated.⁸⁶ It is error to base a judgment on facts not appearing therein,⁸⁷ and the court may decide only questions expressly raised therein or in any amendment thereto agreed on by the parties and permitted by the court.⁸⁸ On a case stated, all questions of pleadings⁸⁹ and forms of procedure⁹⁰ are waived, and the only question open is whether plaintiff can recover in any form of action.⁹¹ Where a case heard on an agreed statement of facts constitutes a case stated, requests for rulings have no standing,⁹² and it is the duty of the judge to order the correct judgment on the agreed facts.⁹³ If the conscience of the trial judge leads him to the conclusion that the case stated ought to be discharged and the action stand for trial to the end that justice might be done, he has the power to take this course.⁹⁴ However, the mere inartificiality in the drawing of the case stated is not sufficient ground to set it aside.⁹⁵

Construction. It has been held that, when a construction of a contract, annexed to the agreed statement of facts, is averred, the court may look into and construe the contract, and is not bound by the construction as averred in the case stated,⁹⁶ and where a case stated provides that all of the averments of the complaint and new matter are admitted for the purpose of submitting the issue, all portions of a lease attached as an exhibit are incorporated as part of the case stated, even though they are not otherwise set forth.⁹⁷ Where a statute re-

Restating facts in different form

Submission of issues to a jury, and direction of an action at law in equity actions generally see Equity §§ 495-512.

Action at law included in equity suit
If in a suit in equity a cause of action at law is included for which a court of equity could not properly give relief, court can submit such matter to a jury.—Alaska Rural Rehabilitation Corp. v. Pippel, 9 Alaska 500.

Resort to interrogatories essential

Resort to interrogatories to jury was essential for determination by jury of equitable issues contained in cross complaint seeking specific performance of an agreement to convey realty in ejectment action.—Barber v. Baldwin, 67 A.2d 1, 135 Conn. 558.

Conditional submission

In equity cases, court may in its discretion grant a trial by jury on such conditions as it may see fit to impose.—In re Cazaurang's Estate, 170 P.2d 694, 75 Cal.App.2d 217.

Issues of fact arising in actions for reformation have been submitted under the general provisions of codes providing for trial of issues by jury.—Giles v. Latimer, 137 P. 113, 40 Okl. 301.

In New Jersey

(1) By virtue of rules of the supreme court all issues of fact not triable of right by jury shall be decided by the court without a jury.—Asbestos Fibres, Inc. v. Martin Laboratories, Inc., 96 A.2d 395, 12 N.J. 233—O'Neill v. Vreeland, 77 A.2d 899, 6 N.J. 158—Steiner v. Stein, 66 A.2d 719, 2 N.J. 367.

(2) Thus, where an equitable issue is before the court it should be decided by the court alone, even though other issues are involved in the case which were triable as of right by a

a. In General

In actions of an equitable nature, and in other actions in which the parties are not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right, it is very generally held that the court may, on the application of either party, or on its own motion, submit issues of fact involved in the case to a jury.

In actions of an equitable nature, and in other actions in which the parties are not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right, it is very generally held that the court may, on the application of either party, or on its own motion, submit issues of fact involved in the case to a jury.⁹⁹ The purpose of submitting specific interrogatories to the jury in equitable actions is to assist the court in finding the facts.¹ The court may submit the issues of fact without the request² or consent³ of either party, and the submission of issues to the jury in the absence of a party or his counsel is not prejudicial error, especially where the answer is immaterial.⁴ No constitutional right of parties to a trial by the court in an equitable action is violated by submission of issues to the jury⁵ inasmuch as the jury's verdict is merely advisory.⁶ However, the court, as trier of the facts, cannot delegate its duty to a jury.—Volker v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 78 A.2d 290, 11 N.J.Super. 225.

(3) Before proceeding with trial in the Law Division, court must be put on notice by pleadings and pretrial order that an equitable claim or defense is involved, because in such case rule comes into play under which court alone is required to decide all issues of fact not triable by a jury.—Volker v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 78 A.2d 290, 11 N.J.Super. 225.

(4) However, this rule requiring trial by the court alone is subject to a provision of the rules that the court may try with an advisory jury any issue of fact not triable of right by a jury.—Asbestos Fibres, Inc. v. Martin Laboratories, Inc., 96 A.2d 395, 12 N.J. 233—O'Neill v. Vreeland, 77 A.2d 899, 6 N.J. 158—Steiner v. Stein, 66 A.2d 719, 2 N.J. 367.

jury except as provided by law,⁷ and under a statute making it mandatory for the court to decide issues of fact where the parties have waived a jury trial the court cannot frame special issues for a trial by jury without the consent of the parties who have waived trial by jury; if counsel deems a case an improper one for submission of special issues, he should call the attention of the court to the fact at the time the charge is delivered.⁸

In special proceedings. In special proceedings founded on a statute and unknown to the common law, if the statute does not provide for a jury trial, the court is without power to submit issues arising therein to a jury over the objection of one of the parties.⁹

Discretion should be sparingly exercised

The discretion of the court in an equitable action to submit legal questions to the jury should be sparingly exercised in view of difficulty of differentiating between two cases and providing adequate treatment for each in record on appeal.—Lombardi v. Laudati, 200 A. 1019, 124 Conn. 569.

b. Discretion as to Whether Issues Shall Be Submitted

In equitable actions or other actions in which a jury trial is not a matter of right it is solely within the discretion of the court whether or not it shall submit issues of fact to the jury.

While, as already shown supra, subdivision a of this section, the court may submit issues of fact to the jury, in equitable actions or other actions in which a jury trial is not a matter of right, it is very generally held that it is solely a matter within its discretion whether or not it shall do so,¹⁰ unless it is provided otherwise by organic law or statute,¹¹ and the submission to a jury will not be set aside except for clear abuse.¹² Even after a

Annulment action

Rule relating to settlement of issues for trial by jury in the discretion of the court is inapplicable to an annulment action where a party may have a jury trial as a matter of right.—Jackson v. Jackson, 7 N.Y.S.2d 407, 255 App.Div. 812—Sefranka v. Sefranka, 74 N.Y.S.2d 616, 190 Misc. 639.

Effect of waiver of jury trial

Where statute makes it mandatory on the court to decide issues of fact where the parties have waived a jury trial, the court no longer has discretion whether or not to submit issues of fact to the jury but is without power to direct jury trial.—Toohey v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit Corp., 290 N.Y.S. 487, 248 App.Div. 694—Tobin v. Shwitzer, 295 N.Y.S. 590, 162 Misc. 747.

In Kentucky

(2) On the other hand, in an equitable action where a distinct legal issue is involved, either party has a right to have such issue decided by a jury when application therefor is seasonably made.—*Castleman v. Rules governing discretion. It is the duty of the court to try the issues involved unless convinced that it should do otherwise.²⁰ It should exercise discrimination and submit questions to a jury only where it appears that needed information may be more certainly gained through a jury.²¹ Unless the trial of issues of fact by a jury is essential to the proper administration of justice it is proper to decline to direct issues of fact to be tried by a jury in view of the burdened condition of the jury calendar.²²

§ 581. — Notice of, or Motion for, Submission

Notice of, or motions for, submission of issues to a jury should state the questions which it is desired be submitted, and should be seasonably made.

is too late when made after the court has rendered judgment determining all the issues in the case,³⁴ after submission of the cause to the court,³⁵ after the evidence is entirely made up by depositions,³⁶ after final submission of the cause to the court, and after argument by counsel, especially where the complaining party had expressly agreed that the court might enter judgment on the whole case,³⁷ and after a commissioner's report in a case where the action was referred to a commissioner.³⁸ It has also been held that there is no abuse of discretion in refusing a motion to frame issues noticed before the term but not called up until after jurors were dismissed.³⁹

§ 582. — What Issues Will Be Submitted

Subject to statutory requirements, it is wholly within the discretion of the court as to what issues of fact should be submitted to a jury.

Within limitations imposed by organic law or statute,⁴¹ it is wholly within the discretion of the court as to what issues of fact should be submitted,⁴² and error lies only in abuse of discretion.⁴³ In its discretion the court may submit such interrogatories as it deems will be helpful in the making of the ultimate decision,⁴⁴ and it may submit all⁴⁵ or a part of the issues,⁴⁶ or a single issue⁴⁷ to the jury, although in an equity action the better practice is to submit to the jury all such issues of fact as the jury may properly try.⁴⁸ It may submit both legal and equitable issues to the jury,⁴⁹ and it is not error to refuse to separate the law from the equitable issues and try the former to the jury and the latter to a court.⁵⁰ However, where a complaint or petition may and does contain two distinct causes of action, the one equitable for reformation of an instrument and the other legal for relief on or under the instrument as reformed, it has been held that it is irregular to submit to the jury all the legal and equitable defenses together.⁵¹

The court may submit such questions of fact as are controverted⁵² or such as it desires to be advised on,⁵³ and refuse to submit others.⁵⁴ Issues are properly submitted to a jury where there is substantial conflict in the evidence.⁵⁵ Issues presenting a question of law⁵⁶ or calling for a conclusion of law⁵⁷ should not be submitted to a jury; and issues should not be submitted to a jury where they are immaterial to a determination of the case⁵⁸ where there is no evidence to support them,⁵⁹ where, under the evidence, but one conclusion could be drawn,⁶⁰ where, although evidence is offered which, standing alone, would call for the intervention of a jury, the complaint is fatally defective, or on admitted undisputed evidence the action is barred by limitation or laches,⁶¹ where they are included within other issues submitted to the jury,⁶² or where the complicated and numerous items in dispute made it a case for the court to determine, because a jury could not intelligently dispose of it.⁶³ So, where various issues made by counterclaims involve the same issues, it is improper to direct a jury trial as to a part only of the issues, since the same issues should not be tried both by the court and by the jury.⁶⁴ Where the submission of issues raised by counterclaim and reply is asked, issues raised by the denials of the allegations of the complaint should not be given.⁶⁵

§ 583. — Framing and Settlement of Issues

The court must frame, or cause to be framed, such question or questions of fact as are desired to be tried by a jury.

The court must frame, or cause to be framed, such question or questions of fact as are desired to be tried by a jury.⁶⁶ Issues of fact may be prepared either by the court, or by counsel under the direction of the court, or prepared by counsel and submitted to the court for approval.⁶⁷ It is the duty of counsel to aid the trial court in determining what issues should be submitted to the jury,⁶⁸ and it has been held that, where the court directs counsel to prepare such issues, it is their duty to make a bona fide effort to comply.⁶⁹ The court may properly frame the questions in the form which it prefers rather than in the forms proposed by counsel if the essential substance of the proposed questions is distinctly and intelligibly expressed in those allowed by the court,⁷⁰ and where the issues as proposed to the court in the motion for submission are defective in form the opposing party may not object thereto since the defect can easily be corrected in the order for the proposed issues.⁷¹

The issues to be tried should be plainly and distinctly stated,⁷² and each should be confined to

Refusal to submit interrogatory held error

In suit for breach of written lease, wherein defendants counterclaimed for reformation, trial court, which submitted to jury, on proper interrogatories, issue as to whether defendants had established ground for reformation of written agreement, committed error in refusing to submit requested interrogatories raising cru-

a single question of fact,⁷³ and the jury should be advised by the issues submitted of the contentions of both parties.⁷⁴ After submitting several questions for rendition of a verdict, submitting the question whether the jury intended to find for plaintiff in a particular amount is not an intimation by the court which tends to influence the jury in plaintiff's favor.⁷⁵ When an issue is directed to try the right to money in court, the court should indicate who are to be the parties plaintiff and defendant, and the cause put in form by filing a declaration, plea, and joinder in issue.⁷⁶ Where the questions propounded by the court substantially cover the issues, if counsel desire a fuller submission or submission in different form they should request it.⁷⁷ Under some statutes where fact issues are framed for jury trial in an equity case, the issues do not survive the term at which they are framed unless continued by special order,⁷⁸ and where a cause is continued to a subsequent term and tried by another judge he is not bound by the issues made by the judge before whom the cause originated, and may make another order of submission.⁷⁹

Time of framing and settling. In some jurisdictions it has been held a proper exercise of discretion for the court to withhold the framing and settlement of the issues to be submitted to the jury until after the evidence is heard.⁸⁰ The judge has power to submit the issues to the jury at all times and until the very close of the trial of the cause,⁸¹ and it is not necessary that the issues be framed and settled before the evidence is heard,⁸² although this may be done if the court sees fit to do so.⁸³ In at least one jurisdiction it has been held that, while it would be better practice to settle and submit issues before the trial is commenced,⁸⁴ the court on its motion may submit issues after commencement of the trial when not restrained by positive law;⁸⁵ and it is not prohibited from so doing by a rule of court requiring parties to a cause to submit issues before commencement of the trial, since such rule does not pretend to prescribe the practice where the court itself feels the need of the aid of the jury.⁸⁶

§ 584. — Submission of Case for General Verdict

As a general rule in equitable actions involving issues of fact it is erroneous to submit the whole case to the jury with directions to return a general verdict.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁷ it is ordinarily held that in equitable actions involving issues of fact it is erroneous to submit the whole case to the jury with directions to return a general verdict; only the issue or issues of fact involved in the case should be submitted to the jury,⁸⁸ and they should be directed to make specific findings of fact on the issues so submitted.⁸⁹ However, such a submission of the general issue to the jury and re-

Purpose of statute providing for special verdict

The primary object of statute providing for a special verdict if requested by either party is to simplify complicated equity cases so that jury may intelligently settle controlling issues by making answer to specific questions, and it is not purpose of statute to keep jury ignorant of legal effect of their answer to questions submitted.—Grant v. Hart, 30 S.E.2d 271, 197 Ga. 662.

fusal to submit special interrogatories, while it may be an irregularity,⁹⁰ is not necessarily prejudicial.⁹¹

§ 585. — Trial in General

Where the framing of issues for a jury is discretionary and where no statute or rule of the court provides otherwise, the referring court may control to great extent the conduct of the trial.

Where the framing of issues for a jury is discretionary and where no statute or rule of the court provides otherwise, the referring court may control to a great extent the conduct of the trial.⁹² The trial of a case of equitable cognizance is governed for the most part by the same rules as in an action at law.⁹³ Where judge exercises both common-law and chancery jurisdiction in the same court at the same time, and has the right to make the issue at law and immediately call a jury to try it, it is unnecessary to follow some of the rules which prevail under the system of separate courts of chancery and common-law jurisdiction, and in practice some of such rules are disregarded.⁹⁴ When a complaint or petition may and does contain two distinct causes of action, the one equitable and the other legal, the court may try the equitable cause of action first and the legal cause afterward,⁹⁵ and although this has been held to be the correct practice,⁹⁶ it has also been held that trial of such causes of action before a judge and jury may be at the same time.⁹⁷ If the action proceeds to trial by jury, without the equitable cause being specially ordered to be so tried, there is no submission of that cause to the jury, even though the parties did not object.⁹⁸

All of the evidence submitted to the court on is-ssues which it submits to the jury must be presented to the jury,⁹⁹ in order that they may answer the interrogatories submitted to them¹ and advise the court intelligently.² The parties are entitled to introduce oral testimony where the common-law issues have been transferred from chancery and submitted to a jury.³ Inasmuch as the verdict is merely advisory, any irregularities in the formation of the jury are immaterial.⁴ Keeping the jury together and requiring them to continue their consideration of facts for several days is not an abuse of discretion.⁵

§ 586. — Instructions

Neither party has the right to ask the court to instruct the jury, and error cannot be predicated on a refusal to give instructions or on the instructions given.

Since the court is not in any manner controlled by the verdict of the jury, which is purely advisory, neither party has the right to ask the court to instruct the jury,⁶ and error cannot be predicated on refusal to give instructions.⁷ So, also, for the same reason, the instructions given should not be measured by the strict standards that would apply if the verdict were controlling,⁸ and error cannot be predicated on instructions given,⁹ although erroneous.¹⁰

The verdict must be sufficient in fact and in law for the basis of a judgment of the court finally settling and adjudicating the rights of the parties.¹¹ It should cover all the issues submitted¹² unless some of the issues are eliminated by consent of the parties;¹³ and the court may properly refuse to accept a verdict which does not conform to this requirement.¹⁴ A general verdict is improper and should not be received,¹⁵ and no judgment should be entered on it.¹⁶ Where several issues are submitted, they should be answered separately,¹⁷ a practice which, it has been said, greatly aids both court and jury in the proper adjudication of the rights of the parties.¹⁸

Certification. Under some statutes, where the issues in a case which has been placed on the special term calendar and noticed for trial are sent to the trial term, to be tried by a jury, a verdict rendered on the issues, whether framed by the trial court or by the special term, must be certified by the clerk of the trial term to the special term.¹⁹

Issue cognizable both at law and in equity

Even if issue involved in suit in equity is one cognizable both at law and in equity, nevertheless verdict of jury would not be binding on chancellor.—Transylvania University v. McDonald's Ex'r, 126 S.W.2d 1117, 277 Ky. 608.

Effect of statute

(1) Under provisions of statute as to the force of the verdict jury's findings on fact issues framed for jury trial under the same statute in equity case are conclusive, if supported by any evidence, and presiding judge can only affirm verdict or set it aside and order new trial, but he may have jury make findings on issues for his aid and enlightenment in determining judgment to be rendered, since such right is independent of the statute, and when he does, he is not bound to accept jury's verdict in deciding on judgment.—Momeier v. John McAllister, Inc., 3 S.E.2d 606, 190 S.C. 529—Johnstone v. Matthews, 191 S.E. 223, 183 S.C. 360.

(2) Statutory amendment including, within equitable suits in which jury is only advisory, suits to foreclose mortgages and other liens, was intended to be applicable to an action to recover money claimed to be owing on a contract, if foreclosure of a mortgage or other lien to secure payment thereof is also sought.—*Petty v. with its own determination,⁴³ as though the trial had taken place without a jury,⁴⁴ or, what is an equivalent, it may direct a particular verdict on the facts as being in accord with its own conclusions.⁴⁵

(c) Necessity for, and Effect of, Adoption

Before a verdict or findings can become effective or be made the basis of a judgment, they must be approved or adopted by the court in some unmistakable manner.

Before a verdict or findings can become effective,⁴⁶ or be made the basis of a judgment,⁴⁷ they must be approved or adopted by the court in some unmistakable manner.⁴⁸ Until adopted, the verdict is not proof of the facts found thereby,⁴⁹ but only of the fact that it was rendered.⁵⁰ If, however, the verdict or findings are adopted by the court, they become its findings or verdict,⁵¹ to the extent to which the issues made by the pleadings are covered.⁵² When adopted, a verdict has the conclusive effect of a final adjudication.⁵³

(2) Where Trial of Issues by Jury Matter of Right

Where, notwithstanding the equitable nature of the action, the parties are entitled to a jury trial of specific legal issues of fact or of all the issues of fact in the case, the verdict is not merely advisory but is binding on the court and the parties.

Where, notwithstanding the equitable nature of an action, the parties are by positive provision of organic law or statute entitled to a jury trial of specific legal issues of fact therein designated,⁵⁴ or of all the issues⁵⁵ of fact in the case, the verdict is not merely advisory, unless the right to a jury is waived,⁵⁶ but is binding on the court and the parties, having the same force and effect as verdicts in ordinary jury trials,⁵⁷ and it cannot be set aside unless it is palpably against the weight of the evidence,⁵⁸ or for some other reason authorized by law and the facts.⁵⁹ However, the court will have the right to set aside the verdict if it considers it contrary to the weight of evidence.⁶⁰

In most jurisdictions, where organic or statutory provisions of the character under consideration are in force, the verdict is given this effect only in cases where legal issues are submitted to the jury,⁶¹ although in at least one jurisdiction the verdict would seem to be conclusive irrespective of whether the issues submitted were legal or equitable.⁶²

the court rather than on the jury verdict,⁶³ and it is well settled that it is error to render judgment simply on the verdict of a jury which is merely advisory.⁶⁴ The judgment must be the result of the conclusions of the judge both on the law⁶⁵ and the facts.⁶⁶ The verdict does not relieve the court of the necessity of entering legal conclusions,⁶⁷ or of making findings of fact as a basis for the judgment,⁶⁸ especially where only part of the material issues made by the pleadings is submitted by the jury;⁶⁹ and this is so whether or not either party specifically demand findings.⁷⁰ Where a verdict covers only one phase of the issues of fact, the court is authorized to render judgment on the issues not covered.⁷¹

§ 588. View or Inspection

a. Power or duty to make

b. Purpose for which view or inspection permissible

c. Method of making d. Objections and exceptions

a. Power or Duty to Make

On a trial of a cause by the court sitting without a jury, it is generally held that the court has a discretionary power to inspect material objects or to view premises in dispute or premises where facts material to the cause have occurred.

On a trial of a cause by the court without a jury, it has very generally been held that the judge trying the case may, in the exercise of his discretion, inspect material objects, or view premises in dispute or premises where facts material to the cause have occurred;⁷² but it also has been held that a court is in error if it resorts to a view to enlighten itself as to material facts of a case.⁷³ While this power has sometimes been expressly conferred by statute,⁷⁴ no statutory authority is necessary to the exercise thereof.⁷⁵ The power may be exercised on the request of either or both parties.⁷⁶ In some jurisdictions it has been held that the trial judge

Action of court held not error

Although statute authorizing a view of premises by a jury where, in the opinion of the court, it is proper for the jury to have a view of the property involved, does not specifically provide that courts may have a like privilege of examining the property, action of trial court in viewing premises was not error.—*Taxpayers League of Wayne County v. may exercise the power on his own motion,⁷⁷ but in other jurisdictions the rule is that there is no authorization for a view without the knowledge and consent of the parties.⁷⁸ In the absence of statute providing otherwise,⁷⁹ it is entirely within the discretion of the court as to whether or not it will view the premises;⁸⁰ and it may refuse a request to do so,⁸¹ even after the court has stated that it intended to inspect the premises, if the party asking the inspection is given a sufficient opportunity to supply any deficiency in the evidence that he might have allowed to exist by reason of his belief that the court was going to make such inspection.⁸² It has been held that a view would be unwarranted where the trial court is making a ruling on a demurrer.⁸³

View outside of jurisdiction. It has been stated that the power to inform itself by a view, outside the territory of its jurisdiction, is inherent in a court at common law.⁸⁴ Taking of a view in another state by the court as the trier of the facts, to acquire material information obtainable by inspection only, is not so far beyond the jurisdiction of the court as to render all subsequent proceedings, including judgment therein, void, but, if an irregularity in the trial, it is obviated by the consent of the parties or the absence of their objection thereto.⁸⁵

A view or inspection is permissible for the purpose of enabling the court to understand the evidence and properly to apply it, but the authorities are in conflict as to whether or not the facts ascertained on the view can be considered as evidence or have the effect of supplying evidence.

A view or inspection of the character under consideration is permissible for the purpose of enabling the court properly to understand the evidence,⁸⁶ and properly to apply it.⁸⁷ A view may be considered as bearing on the credibility of the witnesses who appeared at the trial.⁸⁸ It cannot be considered as evidence or have the effect of supplying evidence independent of, or in addition to, that taken in the course of the trial,⁸⁹ or supplant evi-

Right to disregard evidence

Trial judge, who was trier of facts, was not required to accept evidence favorable to plaintiff rather than on-the-spot factual picture obtained by judge in his own personal inspection of the area involved.—Lauder v. Wright Inv. Co., Cal.App., 271 P.2d 970.

in a case not properly the subject of judicial notice a view without the consent of the parties cannot provide independent evidence on a controverted issue so as to support alone a finding otherwise not supported by other evidence,⁸⁷ and, in fact, contrary to the evidence introduced.⁸⁸ A judgment based on evidence derived from a view made without the consent of the parties has been held erroneous.⁸⁹ It has been held that even though a view supplies independent evidence trial courts are not justified in disregarding other evidence on the trial and that when a verdict, based solely or partly on a view, is not supported by the other evidence, it cannot stand.¹ Where a judgment is based on evidence it will be sustained.² Irrespective of the evidentiary status of findings of fact based on a view made by a court, it has been held that where a view is taken with the consent of the parties, it adds to the advisory weight of the findings of the court.³ Impressions made on the judge by his own inspection of premises are entitled to little, if any, weight in a matter involving special knowledge and experience and as to which experts differ,⁴ and do not dispense with proof of matters requiring expert skill and knowledge.⁵ It has further been held that a judgment cannot be sustained where a finding is based on inspection alone, unsupported by other evidence, where there is a necessity for proof as to matters requiring expert skill and knowledge.⁶ Where a chancellor who, without consent or knowledge of the parties, viewed premises involved in litigation and ordered a survey of the property to be made and thereafter based his decree on the impressions he gained from the view and the survey made, it has been held that the overruling of a motion to permit plaintiff to interrogate the surveyor with respect to the survey he made is error.⁷

c. Method of Making

The manner of taking and the extent of a view are largely discretionary.

The manner of taking and the extent of a view are largely discretionary.⁸ A court should exercise the power to view with caution.⁹ It has been stated that the trial judge should first be satisfied that conditions at the time he views the premises are substantially the same as they were at the time of the occurrence involved in the action,¹⁰ and he should also be satisfied that a personal inspection by him will be fair to all parties concerned and is reasonably necessary to do justice between them.¹¹ The inspection or view as a matter of judicial propriety should be in the presence of the parties, or their attorneys, or they should be given an op-

Taking of view held not to disclose error

(1) Where court sitting without a jury took a view of premises with consent of parties as result of dispute as to whether structure and equipment thereon were new, and court determined the issue by discrediting testimony of plaintiff's witness and accepting testimony of defendants, taking and use of the view disclosed no error.—Bancroft Realty Co. v. Alencowicz, 72 A.2d 380, 7 N.J.Super. 105.

(2) In action predicated on nuisance resulting from operation of concrete mixing plant, failure of trial judge to examine interior of plaintiff's house and defendant's office when he visited defendant's premises was not error, absent request therefor.—Nailor v. C. W. Blakeslee & Sons, 167 A. 548, 117 Conn. 241.

(3) In action based upon Labor Code for injuries sustained by painter when he fell from defective ladder while working on defendant's property, the testing of ladder from which painter fell by trial judge at building where trial was conducted, rather than on premises where painter fell, was not error.—Daniels v. Johnson, 101 P.2d 707, 38 Cal.App.2d 619.

portunity to be present,¹² but the failure to do so does not necessarily constitute an abuse of discretion.¹³ The inspection should be "reduced to form."¹⁴ Although a statute requires the presence of the secretary or stenographer of the judge at the view, the absence of the secretary or stenographer does not invalidate the view, in the absence of objection, exception, or prejudice shown.¹⁵

Change in condition of premises. A party who has knowledge of a change in the condition of the premises brought about by the adverse party before an inspection by the presiding judge under an agreement requiring him to view the premises must ask for a continuance to enable him to restore the property to the condition it was in before it was interfered with by the adverse party; and where he fails to do so, and permits the judge to view the premises, he cannot have the findings set aside.¹⁶

d. Objections and Exceptions

Objections to actions taken during a view must be made at the time of the occurrence.

A party desiring to question the validity or effect of any action taken during a view by a trial judge has a duty to object at the time of the occurrence and save an exception thereto,¹⁷ and cannot after a decision has been rendered raise the question for the first time.¹⁸

§ 589. Reception of Evidence

The introduction of evidence at the trial of a cause before the court without a jury is governed by statutes, rules, and principles relating to trials in general, but the same rigid rules as to the admission of evidence are not enforced as in trials before a jury.

In actions tried by the court without a jury, the trial judge is not a mere umpire, limited in his powers concerning the scope of the evidence introduced merely to keeping score between the contending parties, but exercises a comprehensive control as to the evidence.¹⁹ The introduction of evidence at the trial of a case before a judge without a jury is governed by statutes, rules, and principles relating to trials in general,²⁰ but the same rigid rules as to the admission of evidence are not enforced as in trials before a jury.²¹ The admission or exclusion of proffered evidence is ordinarily a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court.²² Where the court rejects competent evidence with the statement that the party offering it would be given a chance to offer it later, it is proper for the court to consider the evidence, although no formal offer is thereafter made.²³ When the admissibility of an item of evidence is dependent on the submission of preliminary proof, the reception of such dependent evidence in face of the fact that the preliminary proof has not been submitted constitutes error.²⁴ Where the trial court restored a cross complaint which was previously stricken and later ordered judgment for plaintiff, it has been held that defendant is estopped to claim the right to introduce evidence in support of his cross complaint where no request to introduce such evidence was made after the cross complaint was restored.²⁵

Stipulations; agreed and uncontradicted statements of fact. When there is no controversy concerning facts stated by counsel,²⁶ or when from the discussion on both sides material facts not in dispute are elucidated,²⁷ the court may take these facts as agreed for the purpose of the trial and decide the case accordingly.²⁸ Such facts stand in the place of evidence.²⁹ Statements to a trial judge made by authorized counsel, intended to be representative of the facts which they expect to develop, may be considered by the trial judge as the equivalent of evidence.³⁰

Introduction of documentary evidence. When a document is received in evidence before a judge sitting without a jury it is not necessary that it shall be read in open court in its entirety.³¹ If the adverse counsel desires any omitted portion to be read to the judge, it is counsel's duty either to read it or to call the attention of the court to the omitted portion.³² Where it is necessary to show the court considerable background to establish the materiality of documentary evidence, technical niceties with respect to admitting parts only of correspondence need not be followed.³³

Separation and exclusion of witnesses and parties. Where parties in interest who are not parties to the record have been deemed to be exempt from the operation of a statutory rule prohibiting the exclusion of parties to an action, it has been held that the exclusion of an intervening party at an interlocutory hearing was not error.³⁴

Taking oral testimony. A court may not receive any ex parte oral communications outside of court and use them as factors in arriving at a decision.³⁵ Communications as to facts on the merits of any litigated case may be presented only by sworn witnesses³⁶ or by agreement of counsel.³⁷ Under some statutes on any issue of fact which arises on the pleadings in an equitable action, unless the issue is transferred to a common-law docket, proof shall be taken by depositions, unless the judge enters an order providing that the evidence shall be heard in the same manner as testimony in ordinary actions, the hearing of evidence orally in an equity case is improper unless there has been a previous order directing that it be so presented.³⁸

Opinion evidence. When a case is tried to the court, the extent to which expert testimony may be received rests largely in its discretion.³⁹

Offer of proof. Where offers of proof include some incompetent evidence, the trial court is not required to separate the incompetent from the competent.⁴⁰

Provisional or conditional admission. In an action where the trial is not to a jury, the trial judge can admit any evidence offered and reserve decision on what legal effect he shall give to it until he decides the case,⁴¹ but evidence which is clearly incompetent should not be received subject to objection,⁴² especially where the objection is to the competency of a witness to testify to transactions with a deceased person.⁴³ Where a court admitted an exhibit in evidence subject to such consideration as the court might think it entitled to, and later, in his oral decision, the trial judge stated that he did not give much weight to the exhibit, it has been held that such action is not a rejection of the exhibit as evidence.⁴⁴ The admission of certain incompetent allegations has been held not to constitute error

where the court, acting without a jury, admitted it only "for whatever light it may throw upon the question of law in the case."⁴⁵

Effect of admission of evidence. Once evidence has been admitted the trial court, as the trier of fact and law, is bound to consider it, as far as it is admissible, for all purposes for which such evidence was offered and claimed.⁴⁶ A court is without authority to consider evidence in determining any questions on which it was not offered.⁴⁷ No rule of law requires the court to consider immaterial and incompetent evidence, although admitted in the case;⁴⁸ on the contrary, it may⁴⁹ and should⁵⁰ be disregarded by the court and it will be presumed that the court, in determining the case, will consider only such evidence as is competent and relevant.⁵¹ It has been held that in no event is the court justified in subsequently eliminating evidence, that was admitted over objection, due to a statutory provision that the record at the close of the trial determines the right of the court to enter judgment non obstante veredicto.⁵²

Exclusion of improper evidence. Since the rules of exclusion in the law of evidence as applied in a court of law are largely a result of the jury system, the purpose of which is to keep from the jury all irrelevant and collateral matters which might tend to confuse them or mislead them from a consideration of the real question involved, when an action is to the court sitting without a jury the rules of exclusion are less strictly enforced,⁵³ the assumption being that the court will not be confused or misled by that which is irrelevant and inconclusive.⁵⁴ It is the better practice to admit all evidence not clearly inadmissible,⁵⁵ or tending merely to burden the record,⁵⁶ even though the court may afterward exclude it,⁵⁷ to the end that any difference of opinion between the trial and appellate courts with respect to it may not necessitate the delay and expense of a new trial.⁵⁸

Existence of insurance. Where a reference to insurance has been made and grounds for admissibility therefor, as discussed supra § 53, are not present, the admission of such evidence is error,⁵⁹ but it is not necessarily fatal, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 1709. In a personal injury action where counsel was permitted to introduce testimony relating to defendants' insurer, it has been held that in view of the fact that under an ordinance defendant was required to carry insurance and the case was tried to the court and not to a jury, the court did not commit error in admitting such testimony.⁶⁰

Propounding questions to witness. The court may propound questions to the witnesses if, in its opinion, the questions asked by counsel for the respective parties are not eliciting all the pertinent facts proper to be considered in determining the issues.⁶¹

d. Circumstances authorizing allowance or denial of application

e. Stage of trial at which case may be reopened

a. In General

It is within the sound discretion of the court trying a cause without a jury as to whether or not it will permit the case to be reopened for the purpose of the introduction of additional evidence.

The right of a trial court to reopen a case for the introduction of evidence is generally recognized at law,⁶⁵ and the power, in some jurisdictions, is expressly conferred by statute or rules of court.⁶⁶ As in case of trials of actions to a jury, as discussed supra § 104, it is within the sound discretion of the court trying a case without a jury as to whether or not it will allow the case to be reopened for the purpose of introducing other evidence,⁶⁷ or for

Statute held to be directory

Court deemed to have proceeded under statute

Where plaintiffs filed notice of intention to move for new trial and notice of motion to set aside judgment, and court reopened cases in order that plaintiffs might introduce further evidence, and court thereafter decided cases for plaintiffs, and entered new findings, conclusions of law, and judgments, court would be deemed to have proceeded under statute authorizing reopening of case for introduction of additional evidence.—Gardner v. any other purpose consonant with justice,⁶⁸ in order to show the exact facts;⁶⁹ and this discretion is not subject to review unless there has been an abuse thereof, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 1606. The discretion will⁷⁰ or should be liberally exercised⁷¹ in behalf of allowing the whole case to be presented.⁷² A request to reopen should not be refused except for the most cogent reasons.⁷³ The court may, on its own motion, order a further hearing to gain additional evidence,⁷⁴ and it has been stated that if a court has jurisdiction over a cause to be exercised in its discretion on petition of the parties in interest, there is such jurisdiction as empowers it to reopen the proceeding on its own motion when such action appears to it to be necessary.⁷⁵ The granting of time for filing written briefs after there has been made a formal entry of "cause submitted" amounts to a reopening of the case.⁷⁶

b. Application

An application to reopen the case must be supported by affidavit or other evidence justifying the failure to offer the evidence at the proper time during the trial.

A petition and affidavit, filed by plaintiff after the court orally announced a decision adverse to plaintiff, alleging that one of the witnesses for defendant had testified mistakenly or falsely, and asking for a new trial, is in effect an application to reopen the case for further testimony.⁷⁷ The application must be supported by affidavit or other evidence justifying the failure to offer the evidence during the trial.⁷⁸ A motion to reopen the case is sufficient if it contains averments which show that the reopening is necessary to the ends of justice,⁷⁹ and comes within the provisions of a statute authorizing such procedure.⁸⁰

80. La.—Vaughan v. Canik, App., 152 So. 364, followed in 152 So. 368.

c. Notice and Hearing

There is authority to the effect that a case cannot be reopened without formal notice to the party or parties whose rights are to be affected. Once the case is properly reopened, the proceedings thereafter held are a regular part of the formal trial.

After a case has been submitted, the court cannot, on its own motion and without a hearing, reopen the case and take further testimony without formal notice to the party or parties whose rights are to be affected,⁸¹ so that they may be present and cross-examine the witnesses called.⁸² Where the local statute requires notice in civil proceedings to be in writing, a verbal notice will be insufficient.⁸³ Where plaintiff, on application to reopen, submitted proof in the form of a letter addressed to the court without supplying a copy of it or any advice thereon to defendants' attorneys, it has been stated that such is not a form of practice which should be either countenanced or indulged in.⁸⁴ If a case is reopened on plaintiff's motion, there is no abuse of discretion if defendant is given five days in which to meet the additional testimony.⁸⁵ Where the case is reopened, the proceedings on the hearing are as much a part of the trial as if the question on which evidence is offered had been raised and the evidence concerning it had been given before the case was originally closed.⁸⁶ Evidence not bearing on the inquiry for which a case is reopened may be excluded by the court,⁸⁷ but it is improper to exclude evidence which would show the exact facts and attain the ends of justice.⁸⁸

Waiver. It has been stated that any technical defects in the procedure of reopening a trial may be deemed waived by the acquiescence of the parties.⁸⁹

d. Circumstances Authorizing Allowance or Denial of Application

Various circumstances have been held to authorize allowance or denial of an application to reopen the case.

In order to justify the granting of an application to reopen the case, it must clearly appear that the applicant has used every effort within his means to procure the evidence before trial,⁹⁰ and if there is doubt on the subject, it is resolved against the applicant.⁹¹ An application to reopen a case may properly be granted to permit the reception of evidence which counsel, from inadvertence, had failed to offer,⁹² and to permit the reception of newly discovered evidence,⁹³ the opposite party being given an opportunity to rebut the evidence,⁹⁴ if it is shown to the court that if such evidence had been in the possession of the movant and submitted to the court at the trial or hearing a determination other than the one arrived at would have resulted;⁹⁵ and it is erroneous to refuse to reopen a case for the admission of newly discovered evidence where there had been no lack of diligence to secure it.⁹⁶ So, also, the application may properly be granted where counsel misunderstood a ruling of court on testimony that had been offered with respect to where the burden of proof rested;⁹⁷ where the court, after submission of the case, decided that material and necessary evidence admitted over objection was incompetent;⁹⁸ where the evidence adduced failed to "throw any substantial light" on the issues;⁹⁹ where the evidence produced on reopening is undisputed and carries no mark or badge of suspicion;¹ where the parties have agreed that either might submit additional evidence;² where there is no objection to the admissibility of the evidence on the proceedings to reopen³ and there is no surprise or prejudice to the rights of the adverse party;⁴ where there has been an omission under a misapprehension of law to introduce evidence on an issue on which the right to recovery depends;⁵ where the rights of defendant will not, in any manner, be affected by the course pursued, except that it permits plaintiff to produce evidence material to the issues involved;⁶ and where objection was first made after the close of the case that plaintiff had failed to make proof of certain formal facts essential to his right of recovery.⁷

The court may also reopen a case to allow the re-introduction of a copy of an instrument theretofore excluded because of improper authentication,⁸ or to permit the interposing of the statute of limitations as a defense and the receiving of evidence in support thereof.⁹ Where the record is, in the opinion of the court, incomplete for want of available evidence proper to be received, the admission of which would render the court better able to do justice between the parties, it may direct the taking of further testimony or the reopening of the case for that purpose.¹⁰ Where an unexpected inference of fraud is drawn from the evidence adduced on the trial, the trial court should reopen the case to the end that all the evidence available which would have thrown any light on the issue of fraud may be laid before the court to enable the person stigmatized by the fraud to meet squarely the evidence from which the inference was drawn.¹¹

On the other hand, it is proper to refuse to reopen a case where no good excuse is shown for not presenting the evidence sought to be introduced at the proper time;¹² where the request is unaccompanied by a specific offer of proof;¹³ where the movant had knowledge or sufficient notice of the need for, and existence of, such evidence and an opportunity to present it at the proper time during the trial;¹⁴ where such evidence is merely cumulative,¹⁵ incompetent,¹⁶ immaterial,¹⁷ or irrelevant,¹⁸ or would be conflicting,¹⁹ and would not affect the result;²⁰ where it is in direct contradiction of the allegations of the moving party's petition and of positive testimony of such party and his witnesses;²¹ where the parties produced conflicting affidavits concerning the motion;²² where the moving party seeks to introduce evidence for the purpose of retrying the case on a new theory;²³ where, at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, motion was made to dismiss by defendant, and plaintiff then had opportunity to introduce additional evidence and the case was then fully argued;²⁴ where dispositions sought to be introduced were taken without authority;²⁵ where proper diligence was not used in making the motion to reopen the case;²⁶ where the request is to submit proof on an issue which had previously been decided against the movant in another action;²⁷ where the court has previously permitted the movant to reopen the case at which time all available pertinent evidence should have been introduced;²⁸ where the movant seeks to raise a question not raised at the trial and to introduce evidence thereon the effect of which would be to alter the amount of the judgment rendered, which amount had been stipulated by the parties;²⁹ or where the evidence sought to be produced had been supplied by stipulation.³⁰

It is proper to refuse to reopen a case to admit evidence of a custom where the movant failed to plead the custom on the trial as he was required to do under the rules of evidence.³¹ A motion to reopen may properly be denied where it is not necessary to a just decision in the case that the movant make the proof offered.³² Where the court after trial allowed an amendment of the complaint to show an oral modification of the contract in suit, its refusal to allow defendant to introduce evidence in rebuttal of evidence given at the trial on the point and objected to by defendant on the ground that it was not within the issues has been held to be error.³³ Where a contract was so ambiguous as to require explanation, parol evidence should have been admitted, even after the submission of the case.³⁴ It is error to deny a motion to reopen to permit a party to meet an issue which was improperly raised by the court.³⁵ Where defendant relied on redelivery of goods to one of plaintiff's employees to reduce the amount sued for, asserting that such employee signed a receipt, and such employee as a witness denied receiving the goods, and gave specimens of his handwriting for comparison, and defendant proved that plaintiff's former employee recalled seeing defendant's employee at plaintiff's place of business, and the court, on deciding for defendant, remarked on plaintiff's failure to produce such former employee, it has been held error to deny plaintiff permission to reopen the case and prove the signatures of all of his employees, to show that none of them signed the receipt.³⁶

It is error to refuse to reopen a case where the granting of the motion will cause no delay and the proffered testimony supplies omitted evidence which is clearly necessary to the due administration of justice.³⁷ If the court has excluded exhibits under the best evidence rule, the case may thereafter be opened on application to permit the party offering such exhibits to introduce the evidence which would have satisfied the rule.³⁸ It has been held that if the court, at the conclusion of plaintiffs'

proof, doubts that plaintiff has established defendant's connection with the cause of action, it should grant plaintiffs' motion to reopen at that time.³⁹ In a suit brought to have a conveyance set aside on the ground of failure of consideration, it has been held that it is error to deny a motion to reopen the case where it is alleged that since the decision, but before judgment was signed, facts occurred which constitute ground for annulment of the contract.⁴⁰ In various other circumstances the propriety of the allowance⁴¹ or denial⁴² of an application to reopen a case has been adjudicated.

e. Stage of Trial at Which Case May Be Reopened

The allowance of an application to reopen the case has been granted at various stages of a trial.

In actions tried by the court without a jury, it has been variously held that it is within the discretionary powers of a court to reopen the case for the admission of further evidence after plaintiff has rested;⁴³ after both parties have rested;⁴⁴ after testimony on the main question is closed;⁴⁵ after the close of all the evidence;⁴⁶ before closing of

(1) The statutory provision for reopening proceeding for the introduction of additional evidence has the same effect as if the case had been reopened after submission thereof before findings had been filed or judgment rendered, and enlarges power of trial court for purpose of minimizing both expense and delay to litigants in those cases wherein trial court may entertain a doubt in any particular cause as to propriety of judgment entered by it.—Roraback v. Roraback, 101 P.2d 772, 38 Cal.App.2d 592.

(2) Fact that court erroneously attempted to accomplish the result of reopening case for additional evidence by granting motions under provision for vacating judgments did not render its action ineffective.—Gardner v. Rich Mfg. Co., 158 P.2d 23, 68 Cal.App.2d 725.

(3) Where trial court in setting aside findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgments was acting under statute authorizing reopening of case for additional evidence, it was duty of court, after receiving additional evidence, to make new findings of fact, conclusions of law, and order such judgment as each case in its entirety required.—Gardner v. Rich Mfg. Co., supra.

of evidence and must take exceptions to rulings admitting or excluding evidence in order to avail themselves of error in such rulings made by a court sitting without a jury; but in other jurisdictions, under certain circumstances, it has been held that parties may not object to the admission of evidence or take exceptions to such rulings, or that an objection or exception is not necessary in a case tried without a jury.

In many jurisdictions it has been held, in actions tried without a jury, either that the parties have the right to object and except to the rulings admitting evidence,⁶⁴ or that objections⁶⁵ and exceptions⁶⁶ to the rulings of the court admitting or excluding evidence are necessary in order to entitle the parties to avail themselves of error in such rulings. An objection to the introduction of evidence must be made in apt time.⁶⁷ The objections must be made and exceptions taken at the time the evidence is offered,⁶⁸ otherwise they will be considered as having been waived.⁶⁹ Also, in order to be available, the objections⁷⁰ and exceptions⁷¹ must be specific and not general, and all objections to the competency of evidence except the one stated are waived.⁷² It has been held, however, that objections to evidence once taken and overruled need not be repeated when subsequent similar testimony is offered.⁷³

On the other hand, although the exclusion of proper evidence in actions tried by the court without a jury has been held to be the subject of a bill of exceptions,⁷⁴ the admission of improper evidence has been held not to be the subject of a bill of exceptions.⁷⁵ It has similarly been held that the question of admissibility of evidence on the ground of relevancy cannot be raised in a case tried without a jury,⁷⁶ and that objection to the admission of evidence is not necessary in a case where a jury trial has been waived.⁷⁷ A court may, however, properly enter on the record that evidence supposed to be improperly admitted was objected to, in order to show that it was not received by consent;⁷⁸ and while a formal bill of exceptions is not required to bring a supposed error of this character to the notice of the reviewing court, it may be done in that form if the court thinks proper to adopt it.⁷⁹ In at least one jurisdiction, in actions at law tried by the court without a jury, a party may except to the admission or rejection of evidence,⁸⁰ and it is necessary for him to make objections to the admissibility of evidence at the proper time if he desires to receive a ruling thereon;⁸¹ but in actions triable in equity, it is not the practice to rule on the admission and exclusion of evidence,⁸² and the court may not exclude offered evidence,⁸³ but must note objections to improper evidence, and such evidence will be disregarded on appeal.⁸⁴ In still other jurisdictions, where the action is referred to the determination of the presiding justice, exceptions do not lie to his rulings admitting or excluding evidence, unless such right is reserved by the parties,⁸⁵ and if during the progress of a trial evidence is admitted against the objections of one of the parties, and subsequently the cause is left to the determination of the presiding judge, such objections must be considered as waived.⁸⁶

Ruling or order. Where proper objections are made, it is the duty of the court to rule on the evidence offered.⁸⁷ It has been held that the court should not postpone rulings on objections to evidence where objections are made,⁸⁸ but there is authority holding that rulings on objections can be

a. In general

b. Determination of credibility of witnesses and weight due testimony

a. In General

In a nonjury trial the judge is the trier of facts and it is his duty to weigh the evidence in the same manner as a jury would.

Where a factual question is involved, the dispute must be settled by the weight of the evidence.⁹⁴ In a nonjury trial the judge is the trier of facts and it is his duty to decide the issues of fact on the evidence,⁹⁵ and the court is not bound to adopt a party's contention as to the weight of the evidence.⁹⁶ On the contrary, it is the right and duty of the court to weigh the evidence,⁹⁷ to determine its weight⁹⁸ and sufficiency⁹⁹ in the same manner as a jury in its province would,¹ and to draw infer-

Finding held not one of law

In jury-waived action at law for wrongful death, where court denied the defendant's motion for judgment at close of plaintiff's evidence and refused to rule upon same motion at close of all the evidence, and decided the case on the facts by findings of facts, conclusion of law, and final judgment, such determination was not a holding as matter of law that defendant was not reckless.—Davis v. The court must consider all the competent evidence before it.⁵ The trial judge should weigh the evidence as a whole, giving it such probative force as in his opinion it is entitled to.⁶ Evidence which would be admissible in chief when admitted by the court on rebuttal should be considered by it and

It is the right and duty of the court to weigh and pass on conflicting evidence,⁸ to determine its sufficiency and probative effect,⁹ and it cannot escape responsibility by a mere statement that its mind is confused or unsettled.¹⁰ It should try to harmonize the evidence,¹¹ and to reconcile apparent contradictions and inconsistencies, if reasonably possible,¹² and, if this is not possible, to accept that which appears to be worthy of credit.¹³ The judge may

Creation of conflict in testimony

Where a credible witness, with apparently adequate opportunity for observation, testifies to an occurrence, mere testimony of other witnesses that they were not cognizant of the occurrence, where opportunities of latter witnesses for observation are not stated, or where it affirmatively appears that their situation was such that they probably would not have observed the event if it had occurred, or where their opportunities were not co-extensive with those of witness who testifies positively to the occurrence, is not sufficient to create a conflict in the testimony.—Graham v. Where the evidence presented is conflicting and irreconcilable, the trial justice must weigh the evidence, consider the credibility of the witnesses, and determine what weight he should attach to their respective testimony.—Breard v. Ouimet, 81 A. 2d 693, 78 R.I. 304.

base his finding and verdict "on the absolute verities of the case as established before him."¹⁴ Where the evidence is conflicting, the judge cannot rule that plaintiff is not entitled to recover,¹⁵ and a motion for such a ruling is premature.¹⁶ In these circumstances, whether plaintiff should recover is a question not of law, but of fact, to be determined on a weighing of all the evidence.¹⁷ In determining the weight and credibility of the evidence produced by a party, the court has a right to consider the failure of the party to call available witnesses and to produce other available evidence.¹⁸ A judge sitting as a jury must accept proofs presented by the evidence adduced with the same conclusive effect they would have on a jury.¹⁹

Presumptions of fact. In a case tried without a jury, it is for the court to determine whether or not the evidence against a presumption of fact is sufficient to overthrow it.²¹

b. Determination of Credibility of Witnesses and Weight Due Testimony

It is the province of the court to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony.

Questions with respect to the credibility of witnesses²² or the weight of evidence²³ are questions of fact and not of law. It is the province of the court to determine the credibility of the witnesses,²⁴ and the weight to be attached to their testimony²⁵ and the inferences to be drawn therefrom,²⁶ in exactly the same sense that the jury should do in the trial of a case.²⁷ The fact that witnesses have not been impeached by attacks on their reputations for truth and veracity does not deprive a trial judge of the right to give his estimate of the weight of the evidence produced.²⁸

Corroborated contradictory testimony

Trial court could believe plaintiff's testimony on first trial of case, even though his contradictory testimony on second trial was corroborated.—Platt v. Platt, 294 P. 73, 110 Cal.App. 327.

Where both witnesses apparently attempted to tell a straight-forward story on the witness stand concerning accident, but one of the witnesses was a 14 year old girl who was apparently much excited at the time of the accident and the other witness was an experienced man of mature years who was evidently cool during the accident, the court accepted the man's testimony as more reliable and credible.—Lumbermen's Mut. Testimony of adversary

Rule that party calling adversary cannot question credibility does not at liberty to believe or disbelieve all³⁸ or any part of a witness' testimony.³⁹ In passing on the testimony as a whole, the court can disregard incompetent testimony and base its judgment solely on testimony it deems competent.⁴⁰ The court is at liberty to accord testimony a construction different from that asserted by a party,⁴¹ and it may disbelieve all evidence presented in behalf of a party,⁴² and is not required to give credit to any evidence tending to prove facts essential to the plaintiff's right of recovery.⁴³

it has not been contradicted,⁴⁶ where the evidence contains improbabilities and contradictions which, alone or in connection with other circumstances in evidence, furnish reasonable grounds for concluding that it is false;⁴⁷ where such testimony is so surrounded by elements of uncertainty, improbability, and fraud as to justify disbelief;⁴⁸ where it appears that the witness might have been inaccurate or mistaken;⁴⁹ where the testimony appears to be inherently improbable or lacking in credit⁵⁰ or is made to appear so by the testimony of other witnesses;⁵¹ or where the testimony is contrary to physical facts, or is inherently impossible, or the inferences deducible therefrom are so opposed to all reasonable probability as to be manifestly false.⁵² The rule is especially applicable where the testimony is based on assumptions and evidence proved to be without sufficient foundation in fact.⁵³ It has been held that a party's evidence should be discredited as a matter of law and disregarded where, without reasonable explanation, he testifies to facts materially different from his testimony in another action, and the change was clearly made to meet the exigencies of the pending action.⁵⁴ The finding of the court will not be disturbed or set aside unless it is apparent that the court misunderstood or disregarded material evidence introduced on the trial,⁵⁵ or unless it clearly appears that the conclusion of the court was based on caprice or without any reasonable foundation,⁵⁶ or the discretion of the court was otherwise abused.⁵⁷

Where the testimony in a case is reasonable and undisputed, the judicial duty is to act on it,⁵⁸ and there is no authority to refuse to do so.⁵⁹ The credibility of interested witnesses must be determined as a question of fact,⁶⁰ and a judge, like a jury, cannot arbitrarily discredit a witness and disregard his testimony because of his interest in the case.⁶¹ In the absence of all contradictory evidence and any inherent improbability in the testimony, a court cannot arbitrarily reject the testimony of a witness whose testimony appears credible,⁶² or arbitrarily disregard the unimpeached testimony of a single witness,⁶³ but must consider such testimony in arriving at a conclusion.⁶⁴ The positive testimony of an otherwise unimpeached witness can be disregarded only when its improbability or inconsistency furnishes a reasonable ground for doing so,⁶⁵ and this improbability or inconsistency must appear from facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence in the case.⁶⁶ Where evidence of an interested witness is corroborated by a disinterested witness, a rejection of that evidence amounts to an arbitrary action by the court.⁶⁷ Likewise, where testimony is not inherently incredible nor improbable and is in a large part corroborated by other evidence, a court is fully justified in giving credit to it.⁶⁸

The fact that a witness was impeached is merely a circumstance to be considered by the trial court in determining his credibility.⁶⁹ In weighing the testimony of a witness a court has the right to take into consideration the manner in which he testified,⁷⁰ his interest in the suit,⁷¹ and the fact that on direct examination his memory was clear and his answers positive while on cross-examination concerning the same matters his memory was poor.⁷²

Presumptions. A disputable presumption is not overcome by positive testimony of an interested witness to the contrary,⁷³ and in such circumstances a question of fact is raised which must be decided by the court.⁷⁴

§ 594. — Demurrer to Evidence

- a. Right to demur
- b. Operation and effect
- c. Motions equivalent to demurrers to evidence
- d. In equitable actions

a. Right to Demur

The right to demur to the evidence in actions tried by the court has been recognized in some jurisdictions.

In a number of jurisdictions the right to demur to the evidence in actions tried by the court without a jury has been recognized,⁷⁵ although it has been said that the court may, in its discretion, decline to pass on a demurrer to the evidence.⁷⁶ This right, it has been said, exists independently of any express statutory authority therefor.⁷⁷

Necessity. In at least one jurisdiction it has been stated that there is never any purpose in urging a demurrer to the evidence where the trial is before the court without a jury,⁷⁸ since where the court is exercising both judicial functions and the functions of the jury the defendant is, without demur-

ring to the evidence, entitled to the judgment of the judge on the evidence.⁷⁹

On agreed statement of facts. Where a case is tried on an agreed statement of facts, a demurrer to the evidence is improper.⁸⁰ In these circumstances the only proper and correct practice is to invoke the judgment of the court as to law on the facts thus agreed on.⁸¹

b. Operation and Effect

A demurrer to the evidence in actions tried by the court without a jury, as in actions tried by a jury, presents for consideration only a question of law, and such demurrer is subject to the rules governing demurrers to the evidence in actions tried with a jury.

A demurrer to the evidence in actions tried by the court without a jury, as in actions tried by a jury, presents for consideration only a question of law,⁸² and such demurrer is subject to the rules governing demurrers to the evidence in actions tried with a jury.⁸³ Accordingly, the evidence is to be viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff,⁸⁴ giving him the benefit of every reasonable inference.⁸⁵ The court cannot weigh conflicting evidence, but must consider as true all portions of the evidence which tend to prove the allegation in the petition,⁸⁶ and reject all evidence unfavorable to him,⁸⁷ or, as otherwise expressed, the truth of all the evidence favorable to plaintiff is admitted by the demurrer,⁸⁸ subject to the limitation that the admission is for the purpose of the demurrer only.⁸⁹ If the demurrer is overruled and no further evidence is offered by either party, it does not follow as a matter of course that judgment should go for the party whose evidence was demurred to.⁹⁰ In rendering judgment the court has authority and it is its duty to weigh such evidence,⁹¹ pass on the credibility of witnesses,⁹² and render such judgment as the court finds to be proper.⁹³

In at least one jurisdiction, in contradiction of the principles heretofore stated, the rule is that in actions of legal cognizance tried to the court without a jury, the court occupies the position of the jury and must necessarily weigh the evidence, pass on the credibility of the witnesses, and determine the rights of the parties;⁹⁴ and a demurrer to the evidence has the legal effect of a motion for judgment⁹⁵ or a motion for a nonsuit.⁹⁶ In weighing the evidence and passing on the credibility of the witness, in passing on a demurrer to the evidence, the court may not disregard the positive testimony of witnesses which is uncontradicted and unimpeached either by positive testimony or by circumstantial evidence, and which is not inherently improbable when taken in connection with the facts and circumstances established.⁹⁷

A demurrer to the evidence cannot be sustained if there is any substantial evidence in support of plaintiff's petition,⁹⁸ but will be sustained where there is no issue of fact presented by the trial court,⁹⁹ or where there is no evidence offered to establish any material fact required to be proved.¹ It is the duty of the court to rule against plaintiff on a motion for judgment only if his evidence when considered fails to make a prima facie case,² or where under no tenable theory of law is plaintiff entitled to recover.³ There is no specific formula or method the trial court must follow to show that it passed on a demurrer,⁴ but any fact, properly in the record, showing or clearly indicating how or that the court did as a matter of fact rule on the demurrer will suffice.⁵

c. Motions Equivalent to Demurrers to Evidence

Judge may entertain

In a nonjury case, the judge may entertain a motion for judgment at the close of plaintiff's case.—Donaldson v. Oak Park Cemetery, supra.

the court to weigh the evidence,¹² and should be overruled if, assuming the truth of all the facts proved and all legal inferences that can be drawn from the evidence, it can be said that plaintiff made out a prima facie case.¹³ It has also been held that a peremptory declaration of law,¹⁴ or the giving of instructions by the court before which the action is tried to the effect that on the evidence plaintiff cannot recover,¹⁵ is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence, and cannot be considered as a conclusion of law or finding of fact, and admits all the facts the evidence tends to prove and every inference that can be reasonably drawn therefrom.¹⁶ A declaration of law in the nature of a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence should be refused when the trial is by a court, the same as if the trial were by a jury, if there was any evidence competent and legally sufficient to sustain plaintiff's case,¹⁷ or if the evidence would warrant a submission of the case to a jury.¹⁸ It has similarly been held that an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence should not be given where the evidence is conflicting.¹⁹ A prayer that "under the pleadings and evidence" there "has been introduced no evidence legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and therefore the verdict must be for the defendant," while insufficient as a variance prayer, may be treated as a demurrer to the evidence, when so intended.²⁰

It has been held that the demurrant hazards

nothing on the result of his motion.²¹ If his motion is denied, he takes up right where he left off, opens his case, and puts in his evidence.²² On the other hand it has also been recognized that the risk to defendant, if he is wrong in demurring to the evidence, is that he will have judgment rendered against him.²³

Effect of ruling. A judgment on a motion for a judgment, which is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence, constitutes a judgment that the party against whom the judgment is entered is not entitled, as a matter of law, to recover,²⁴ or, in other words, that no issue of fact was made by the evidence.²⁵

In some jurisdictions a demurrer to the evidence in equitable actions is recognized.

The decisions are not in harmony on the question whether a demurrer to the evidence is admissible in equitable actions or should be confined to actions at law where a jury is waived. In some jurisdictions a demurrer to the evidence in equitable actions is recognized.²⁶ On entertaining a demurrer, or other motions treated as demurrers, the court cannot weigh conflicting evidence but must consider as true every portion of the evidence tending to prove the case of the party resisting the demurrer.²⁷ Demurrant, therefore, admits as true

Kan.—Wolf v. Washer, 4 P. 1036, 32 Kan. 533.

Motion to dismiss

On considering a motion to dismiss as a demurrer to the evidence, the court must accept as true all portions of the testimony and all reasonable inferences flowing therefrom which tend to prove plaintiff's

all of his adversary's evidence²⁸ tending to support material allegations of the complaint²⁹ and reasonable inferences³⁰ and every conclusion which may be reasonably drawn therefrom,³¹ thus ignoring, in the adversary's favor, conflicts in testimony.³² It is the duty of the court to rule against the party challenged only if his evidence fails to make a prima facie case.³³ If the demurrer is sustained the case is ready for judgment.³⁴ It has been held that demurrant can test the sufficiency of his adversary's evidence without resting or presenting his own case,³⁵ and without risk of penalizing himself.³⁶ Under this rule movant or demurrant suffers no prejudice if his motion or demurrer is overruled;³⁷ he may still meet the case on the merits,³⁸ and it has been stated that if the demurrer is overruled or erroneously sustained, both parties are entitled to be placed in the same position as they were in before the error occurred.³⁹

There are jurisdictions in which a demurrer to the evidence in equitable actions is not recognized,⁴⁰ even though it was formerly recognized.⁴¹ It has been held that a demurrer to the evidence in an equitable action has no effect except to rest the case and submit it to the chancellor for decision on the merits.⁴² In at least one jurisdiction where the demurrer is not recognized the motion is treated as a motion for judgment,⁴³ and in considering such motion the proof favorable to demurrant is not to be disregarded as in a law case,⁴⁴ but, on the contrary, it is the duty of the court to weigh the evidence, both favorable and unfavorable to the challenged party and render judgment thereon,⁴⁵ rather than merely determine whether the challenged party has established a prima facie case as is done in actions at law.⁴⁶

Equitable actions. The practice in some jurisdictions, particularly where authorized by statute or rule of court, is to permit motions for dismissal or nonsuit in actions of an equitable character.⁴⁹ In at least one jurisdiction where involuntary dismissal is permitted in equitable actions, it has been stated that the practice is not to be commended and is a perilous procedure.⁵⁰ In at least one other jurisdiction it was held that, although the case is one of equitable cognizance, if there was no substantial evidence to authorize a recovery, it was the duty of the court to grant a motion for nonsuit for insufficiency of the evidence,⁵¹ but it was said that "it would have been much more satisfactory had the court tried the case on the merits and made findings and a decree, instead of disposing of it as was done."⁵² On the other hand, in some jurisdictions it is held that a motion for nonsuit⁵³ or for

In Pennsylvania

(1) If there has been a formal reference of the cause by the parties to the court without a jury under the provisions of the Act prescribing practice in trials of civil cases at law without a jury, Act of April 22, 1874, P.L. 109, § 1, 12 P.S. § 688, a nonsuit would be improper. —Malone v. Marano, 192 A. 254, 326 Pa. 316.—Commonwealth v. Provident Trust Co., Com.Pl., 92 Pittsb.Leg.J. 348, 58 York Leg.Rec. 101—64 C.J. p 1212 note 33 [a].

(2) If the parties informally refer the case to the court without a jury, a nonsuit may be proper. —Malone v. Marano, 192 A. 254, 326 Pa. 316.

(3) The Act of June 25, 1937, P.L. 2090, § 2, repealed § 1 of P.L. 109, Act of April 22, 1874, insofar as it relates to trials by court without a jury in the courts of common pleas of Philadelphia County, and in such cases, while the practice of granting nonsuits is not to be commended, the trial judge may in his discretion enter a nonsuit.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. J. Jacob Shannon & Co., 70 A.2d 321, 363 Pa. 438—Gaines v. Philadelphia Transportation Co., 59 A.2d 916, 359 Pa. 610.

(4) In actions at law heard by a judge without a jury in Philadelphia County, the judge may enter a nonsuit if in his opinion plaintiff's evidence is insufficient in law to maintain the action, that is, only where the determining factors are so clearly established that reasonable men could not differ as to the finality of their evidentiary import.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. J. Jacob Shannon & Co., supra—Gaines v. Philadelphia Transp. Co., supra.

(5) In such actions in Philadelphia County, where facts constituting an affirmative defense are admitted by plaintiff or established by uncontradicted testimony in plaintiff's case with such conclusiveness as to exclude the reasonable possibility of an inference otherwise, a nonsuit is proper.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. J. Jacob Shannon & Co., supra.

(6) In case tried in Philadelphia County, when considering whether a nonsuit has been properly entered, plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable inference of fact deducible from the evidence.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. J. Jacob Shannon & Co., supra.

Dismissal of jury

Insofar as action was one in equity, trial court could dismiss jury at end of introduction of evidence for failure of plaintiffs to make out a case.—Constantine v. City of Sunnyvale, 204 P.2d 922, 91 Cal.App.2d 278.

Former practice

Prior to an amendment of the Civil Practice Act, a motion to dismiss at the close of plaintiff's case in an equitable action was not recognized. —Fewkes v. Borah, 35 N.E.2d 69, 376 Ill. 596—Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. West, 30 N.E.2d 24, 374 Ill. 516, 136 A.L.R. 372.

64 C.J. p 1212 note 38.

Reason for rule

(1) In cases brought to trial before a jury, the presiding judge rules upon the questions of law and the jury determines the issues of fact. The object of the nonsuit is to withdraw the case from the jury upon a question of law to be decided by the presiding judge. It is the dual nature of the trial that gives rise to the practice of making a motion for nonsuit. There is no necessity for resorting to this practice in chancery cases, as the questions of law and issues of fact are to be determined by the same person except in certain cases.—Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Boddie, 23 S.E.2d 817, 202 S.C. 1—64 C.J. p 1212 note 39 [a].

(2) One of the controlling reasons given by the courts against the granting of nonsuits in equity cases is that such practice may not have the effect of a final judgment as to the rights of the parties, and the same question may afterward arise when plaintiff is able to supply the testimony which was lacking, and thus prolong litigation. An order of nonsuit is not conclusive of the issues.—Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Boddie, supra.

dismissal⁵⁴ for want of evidence to sustain the cause of action, which is the equivalent of a motion for nonsuit,⁵⁵ is not permissible practice in actions in equity, such a motion being allowed only in strictly legal actions,⁵⁶ unless by virtue of statutory authority such practice is authorized.⁵⁷

b. Form and Requisites of Motion

No particular form of words is necessary in making a motion for dismissal or nonsuit.

No particular form of words is necessary in making a motion for dismissal or nonsuit. A motion to dismiss at the conclusion of the evidence, although not based on any stated reasons, will be treated as raising the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify a verdict for plaintiff.⁵⁸ A motion for nonsuit which sufficiently shows that there was presented for consideration by the court the absence of any evidence to establish liability on the part of defendant is sufficient and will not be held objectionable merely because the word "proof," instead of the word "evidence," was used in making the motion.⁵⁹

c. Stage of Trial at Which Motion Made

The stage of the trial at which a motion for nonsuit or dismissal can be made is governed by the local rules of procedure.

A motion for a nonsuit in a case tried without a jury cannot be entertained after the trial court has announced its findings and declared its decision of the case.⁶⁰ An "opinion" is not equivalent to a "decision," and, although the court in a case tried without a jury expressed an opinion indicating that it intended to render a decision in favor of defendants, plaintiff would not be precluded thereby from having a nonsuit.⁶¹ However, in at least one jurisdiction, a motion made before the court has filed written findings of fact with the clerk of the court is inopportune.⁶²

d. Operation and Effect of Motion

- (1) In actions at law
- (2) In equitable actions

(1) In Actions at Law

A motion for nonsuit or dismissal, or equivalent motions, present for consideration of the court a question of law only, which is the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment against the movant.

In most jurisdictions, where a motion for nonsuit⁶³ or dismissal⁶⁴ is held permissible in actions tried by the court without a jury, the motion is considered equivalent to a motion for a directed verdict in a jury trial⁶⁵ or a demurrer to the evidence,⁶⁶ and presents for consideration of the court a question of law only, which is the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment against the party making the motion,⁶⁷ or, in other words, whether there is any competent evidence legally sufficient to make a prima facie case on behalf of movant's adversary.⁶⁸ It has generally been held that the rules governing the motion are the same when the trial is to the court as on a trial to the jury,⁶⁹ and in at least one jurisdiction the same rules apply to a motion for dismissal as apply to a motion for

On such a motion the court cannot consider the weight of the evidence,⁷¹ but only whether there is evidence legally sufficient to be submitted to the court sitting as a jury.⁷² The evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff.⁷³ The truth of plaintiff's evidence is admitted,⁷⁴ whether properly or improperly received,⁷⁵ and also every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom.⁷⁶ The credibility of plaintiff's witnesses cannot be considered,⁷⁷ and conflicting evidence will be disregarded.⁷⁸ If the motion is denied, and defendant does not desire to introduce any evidence and desires the court to take the case on the evidence of plaintiff and weigh it and make a finding of the facts and render judgment

accordingly, he should plainly so inform the court.⁷⁹ The court may then weigh the evidence, determine the question of preponderance thereof, and enter judgment accordingly.⁸⁰

A limitation of the foregoing principles has been recognized where, on motion for a nonsuit or dismissal at the close of plaintiff's evidence, both parties rest; in these circumstances it has been held that the court may weigh the evidence and determine the facts and decide the case on the merits.⁸¹ In some jurisdictions in contradiction of the principles heretofore stated, it has been held without qualification that, on motion for nonsuit or dismissal, or equivalent motions, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court may weigh the facts on the preponderance of the evidence and render judgment on the merits,⁸² but the court cannot assume facts

(2) In Equitable Actions

A motion for nonsuit or dismissal in an equitable action affords a proper means of determining the sufficiency of the evidence to establish a prima facie case for the adverse party.

A motion to dismiss in an equitable action affords a proper means of determining the sufficiency of plaintiff's evidence to make a prima facie case.⁸⁴ In jurisdictions where a motion for nonsuit or dismissal is considered permissible in equitable actions, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, it has been held that defendant can test the sufficiency of plaintiff's evidence without resting or presenting his own case,⁸⁵ and that defendant, for the purpose of the motion, admits every fact which the evidence proves, or tends to prove, as well as the facts which may naturally and rationally be inferred from the facts proved.⁸⁶ The court in passing on the motion should⁸⁷ or is required⁸⁸ to consider the evidence of the adverse party in the most favorable light. In other jurisdictions, where a motion for nonsuit or dismissal is considered permissible in equitable actions, it has been held that, on motion for nonsuit or dismissal at the close of plaintiff's case in an equitable action, the court may decide that evidence offered by plaintiff and received by the court without ruling on objections interposed is inadmissible and cannot be considered in determining the issues,⁸⁹ and that defendant, by moving for judgment at the close of plaintiff's evidence, may thereby rest his case,⁹⁰ and the court may weigh the facts on the preponderance of evidence and render judgment on the merits,⁹¹ but it has also been held that by making a motion to dismiss at the close of plaintiff's evidence defendant does not waive his right to offer evidence.⁹² It has further been held that on a motion for nonsuit and dismissal made at the close of plaintiff's evidence in a chancery case, it is the duty of the court first to determine whether there is evidence tending to prove each element of the case essential to a recovery by plaintiff,⁹³ and, second, if he finds there is evidence to prove each essential element, to weigh the evidence and then determine whether a recovery by plaintiff is sustained by a preponderance of the evidence on each essential element,⁹⁴ and that the uncontradicted testimony of a defendant called by plaintiff for cross-examination must be deemed true⁹⁵ in the absence of any testimony or circumstance from which a contrary inference can be drawn.⁹⁶

table actions, similar conclusions as to the effect of the motion have been reached, and it has been held that, in a suit in equity, the proper practice on a motion to dismiss at the close of plaintiff's evidence is to make findings and render judgment on the merits, not, as in a suit at law, to enter judgment of compulsory nonsuit;⁹⁷ and it has also been held that the effect of the motion is to submit the entire controversy for final judgment.⁹⁸ The entire evidence of plaintiff and defendant, it has been said, is to be received, so that on appeal the supreme court may direct the entry of final judgment;⁹⁹ and plaintiff is not entitled, as he would be on a motion for nonsuit in an action at law, to have any inference drawn in his favor from the evidence which may reasonably be drawn therefrom;¹ but the whole of the evidence is submitted to the court for final judgment,² and if it furnishes ground for different inferences, the finding of the court thereon will not be disturbed unless the evidence preponderates against it.³

e. When Granted or Refused

In a trial by the court without a jury, the granting or refusal of a motion for nonsuit or dismissal is dependent on the sufficiency of the evidence to satisfy the local requirements relating to such motions.

The right to grant a nonsuit is to be sparingly exercised,⁴ and, where a case is close, the preferable course is to deny a motion for nonsuit.⁵ A motion for nonsuit or dismissal should be sustained where the evidence is insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff,⁶ where there is no evidence on which a decision in plaintiff's favor could be sustained,⁷ where there is no evidence, or but a scintilla of evidence, tending to prove the facts necessary to sustain the cause of action,⁸ or where at the close of plaintiff's evidence the court finds that there is no evidence worthy of being submitted to a jury if the case were being tried before a jury.⁹ A motion to dismiss made by defendant at the close of plaintiff's case may be sustained if, in the opinion of the court, plaintiff's case has not been made out by a preponderance of the evidence.¹⁰ If the court in a chancery case, after first determining whether there is evidence tending to prove each element essential to a recovery by plaintiff, finds such evidence is absent, it is the duty of the court to sustain a motion for nonsuit and dismissal;¹¹ if the court finds such evidence to be present but thereafter, after weighing the evidence, finds that a recovery by plaintiff is not sustained by a preponderance of the evidence on each essential element of the case, it is the duty of the court to sustain the motion.¹²

On the other hand, it has been variously stated that a motion for a nonsuit is properly refused where the evidence, although conflicting, is sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff;¹³ where the evidence, and the inferences reasonably arising therefrom, are legally sufficient to prove the material allegations of the declaration;¹⁴ where the evidence, and the inferences reasonably arising therefrom, will support a verdict for plaintiff;¹⁵ where the evidence justifies findings for plaintiff;¹⁶ where substantial evidence is produced by plaintiff in support of his cause;¹⁷ where there is evidence sufficient to go to a jury¹⁸ or to support a verdict for plaintiff;¹⁹ if the case had been tried by a jury;²⁰ where there is sufficient evidence to make a prima facie case for plaintiff;²¹ where the evidence is sufficient either to sustain or defeat plaintiff's case;²² where there is evidence tending to support the cause of action alleged;²³ where there is more than a scintilla of evidence to meet plaintiff's demand;²⁴ where there is substantial evidence, more than a mere scintilla, sufficient to support a finding and judgment for plaintiff, even though there be also evidence sufficient to support a finding and judgment for defendant;²⁵ where the motion fails to eliminate items of plaintiff's claim as to which defendant admits liability;²⁶ where there is some competent, substantial evidence to support every issue needed to make a case, if the evidence on all these issues is credible;²⁷ where there is sufficient evidence to support a decree against defendant;²⁸ or where there is any evidence, although contradicted, clearly tending to prove all the ultimate facts to authorize a recovery for plaintiff;²⁹ unless there is also uncontradicted evidence in the record that establishes an affirmative defense for defendant.³⁰

It has been held that the rule in actions tried by a jury that a motion to dismiss is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and should not be sustained unless the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict if it had been tried by a jury, has no application to cases tried without a jury.³¹ Also, it has been held error to grant a nonsuit because the court did not credit the testimony of the principal witness for plaintiff, since the court in passing on the motion is bound to regard the truth of the evidence introduced by plaintiff in support of the complaint as admitted.³² For obvious reasons the motion should be refused where, if well taken, it goes only to the measure of damages and not to the right of action.³³ So it has been held in some jurisdictions that a motion for nonsuit should be refused where the evidence introduced by plaintiff is conflicting³⁴ or where there is a disputed material question of fact which on a jury trial the court would have been required to submit to the jury,³⁵ or where the granting of a nonsuit must depend in any appreciable degree on the credibility of witnesses.³⁶ It has also been held that, if plaintiff, in a law case tried to the court without a jury, at the close of his case has offered no evidence on a material fact required to be proved, or has offered evidence overcoming any prima facie case made by him, defendant's motion, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, to find in favor of defendant, may properly be granted, and the litigation terminated.³⁷

Where the court is required to make findings on the material factual issues, as discussed infra § 610 et seq, and where issues of fact are presented on complete evidence, the granting of a nonsuit is improper unless justified by some rule of law under which it is unnecessary to decide the issues of fact.³⁸ Where a statute makes it the duty of the court to give its decision in writing, and state facts found and conclusions of law separately, it has been uniformly held that the court is without power to dismiss a case without such findings, on the ground that plaintiff has failed to establish a cause of action, except where the evidence adduced for plaintiff as a matter of law would not have justified a finding in his favor.³⁹ A failure to grant a motion for nonsuit after the court has announced at the close of plaintiff's case that judgment would be entered in favor of defendant has been held not to constitute error.⁴⁰

1. Determination and Disposition of Motion

- (1) In actions at law
- (2) In equitable actions

(1) In Actions at Law

Where a motion for nonsuit or dismissal is sustained, judgment for the movant necessarily follows, but this is not necessarily an adjudication of the issues of fact.

Where a motion for nonsuit or dismissal is sustained, judgment for defendant necessarily follows,⁴² but the sustaining of the motion is not an adjudication of the issues of fact.⁴³ At least where the court is not authorized to weigh the evidence on such a motion, as discussed supra subdivision d of this section, the court has power only to dismiss the complaint without prejudice to a new action,⁴⁴ and cannot render final judgment for defendant.⁴⁵ The fact that a nonsuit is denied does not disclose that plaintiff has established a prima facie case.⁴⁶ If the motion is denied, the court in effect by that decision announces that plaintiff is entitled to have a finding on the question of fact, and should at once proceed to determine the preponderance of the evidence, unless further evidence is introduced, and render judgment accordingly.⁴⁷ and it is not requisite that either party should ask the court to decide the question of fact after overruling the motion.⁴⁸ If the motion is denied and defendant has not rested his case, he is entitled to proceed with the trial and the making of his defense⁴⁹ and it is error for the court, under such circumstances, to refuse to hear further evidence and to render a judgment for plaintiff.⁵⁰ Where defendant moved for judgment at the close of plaintiff's case on the ground of an affirmative defense, but did not inform the court that he did not elect to offer evidence or had closed his case and desired that the court pass on questions of fact in the record, and there was sufficient evidence in the record to sustain plaintiff's case and to justify denial of defendant's motion, it has been held that the motion should be denied and defendant required to offer evidence of his defense in order that the court might, at the close of all the evidence, determine the question whether on the facts appearing in the record the affirmative defense had been proved.⁵¹ If the motion is denied and defendant elects to offer no evidence, the decision is made on plaintiff's evidence.⁵² If the trial court erroneously allows the motion and, on appeal, the order is reversed, on remand of the cause to the trial court for further proceedings, defendant may proceed to adduce evidence in support of his defense.⁵³

(2) In Equitable Actions

If, in an equitable action, the court is authorized to weigh the evidence on a motion for dismissal or nonsuit, the granting of such motions at the close of the plaintiff's evidence operates as an adjudication on the merits.

the dismissal of an action at the close of plaintiff's evidence operates as an adjudication on the merits.⁵⁴ If the motion is allowed the case is decided in favor of defendant,⁵⁵ but if the motion is overruled, defendant may offer testimony in support of his defense.⁵⁶ Where the motion is denied and defendant elects to offer no evidence, the decision is made on plaintiff's evidence.⁵⁷ If the trial court erroneously allows the motion and, on appeal, the order is reversed, on remand of the cause to the trial court for further proceedings, defendant may proceed to adduce evidence in support of his defense.⁵⁸

Stage of trial at which ruling can be made. Ordinarily, a trial court may not terminate a trial by judgment before both parties have completely submitted their cases and rested, but an exception to the rule applies in cases where it appears from one party's evidence that no judgment in his favor would be proper.⁵⁹ On a motion to dismiss made at the close of plaintiff's case, it has been held that the court may rule on the motion at that time or reserve its decision, direct defendant to proceed with his case, and rule on the motion at any later stage of the case prior to the close of all the evidence.⁶⁰

(1) Prior to an amendment of the Civil Practice Act, a motion to dismiss made at the close of plaintiff's evidence had the effect of submitting the cause to the chancellor on the merits and defendant thereby waived the right to offer evidence in support of his defense.—Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. West, 30 N.E.2d 24, 374 Ill. 516, 136 A.L.R. 372.

(2) The amendment of Civil Practice Act giving defendant right to present his evidence in equity proceeding, where his motion for a favorable finding at close of plaintiff's evidence is denied, was enacted to give a defendant the same rights in equity he has long had in a proceeding at law.—People ex rel. Reiter v. Lupe, 89 N.E.2d 824, 405 Ill. 66.

Final hearing

If defendant rests his case on a motion to dismiss, he is to be regarded as having submitted the case for a final hearing on plaintiff's evidence.—Shepard v. Shepard, 186 S.W.2d 472, 353 Mo. 1057—Hoynes v. Hoynes, Mo. App., 218 S.W.2d 823.

If a party desires to avail himself of error in overruling a motion to set aside a nonsuit, he must except when the motion is overruled.⁶¹ The omission to do so is not cured by a general exception when a motion in arrest of judgment is overruled.⁶² Exceptions must be saved to each specific ruling as it occurs during the progress of the cause.⁶³

§ 596. — Directing Verdict

- a. In general
- b. Operation and effect
- c. When granted or refused

a. In General

In some jurisdictions a motion to direct a verdict is considered not applicable to a trial without a jury, but there are jurisdictions where such motions or equivalent motions are permitted in nonjury actions.

In some jurisdictions it is stated without qualification that a motion to direct a verdict is not applicable.—Kanauske v. Clark, 57 N.E.2d 890, 388 Ill. 357.

(2) In a subsequent Supreme Court decision wherein the amendment to the Civil Practice Act was construed, the court laid down the text rule stated above and held that Kanauske v. Clark, supra, created an erroneous impression.—Reiter v. Illinois Nat. Cas. Co., 73 N.E.2d 412, 397 Ill. 141, certiorari denied Reiter v. Palmer, 68 S.Ct. 100, 332 U.S. 791, 92 L.Ed. 373.

60. N.J.—Ucci v. Ucci, 69 A.2d 891, 6 N.J. Super. 61.

Effect of defendant's evidence

The only effect that fact that part of defendant's case had been put in before granting of defendant's motion to dismiss complaint had on decision of the motion was that plaintiff was entitled not only to benefit of his proofs, but also to benefit of any evidence put in by defendant which supplied any deficiency in plaintiff's proofs.—Ucci v. Ucci, supra.

ble to a trial without a jury,⁶⁴ one of the reasons assigned being that "a verdict in law signifies the final action taken by a jury and nothing else."⁶⁵ It has been similarly stated that it is not error to overrule a motion for a directed verdict in an action at law tried by the court without a jury, "if for no other reason than there was no jury to be directed."⁶⁶ In other jurisdictions it has been held that, in actions at law tried by the court without a jury, a motion for a directed verdict,⁶⁷ or for a peremptory instruction in the nature of a directed verdict,⁶⁸ or for a declaration of law that defendant is entitled to judgment,⁶⁹ may be made on such trial, and such motion is governed by the same principles of law and attested by the same consideration as would be applicable to such a motion if a jury were present.⁷⁰ It has been held that an intelligible or proper request to a judge sitting without a jury would be a request for a ruling of law that on all the evidence plaintiff is not entitled to recover,⁷¹ or a motion for a finding for movant,⁷² or a motion for a judgment for movant,⁷³ or a motion for a finding and judgment.⁷⁴

In equity. In at least one jurisdiction it has been held that a motion for a directed verdict after the introduction of plaintiff's evidence is not permissible in an action in equity,⁷⁵ but it has also been held that the court may direct a verdict in an equitable action, although the evidence is conflicting, and enter judgment on its own finding.⁷⁶ Where it is permissible in an equitable action to move for a decree at the close of a litigant's evidence, it has been held that the making of such a motion is closely analogous to the situation in an action at law where there has been a motion to exclude the evidence and direct a verdict.⁷⁷

Form and requisites of motion. A motion for a directed verdict based on matters of variance is defective as a variance prayer if the motion does not specifically point out wherein the variance relied on lies.⁷⁸

Stage of trial at which motion is made. A motion for judgment inopportune made is properly denied.⁷⁹ The proper practice in jury-waived cases has been held to be to present a motion for judgment at the close of the evidence and before the case is submitted to the trial judge for decision.⁸⁰

A motion for a directed verdict or other equivalent motions made at the close of the plaintiff's case raises a question of law as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a verdict against the party making the motion.

A motion for a directed verdict, or other motions equivalent to a motion for a directed verdict, made at the close of plaintiff's case raises a question of law⁸¹ as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a verdict against the party making the motion,⁸² or whether there is any evidence fairly tending to prove the allegations of plaintiff's declaration.⁸³ It is the duty of the court to base its decision on the status of the proofs and pleadings at the time the motion is made.⁸⁴ Where the motion is made at the close of plaintiff's case, the court in considering the motion cannot consider the weight of the evidence or its credibility,⁸⁵ and may test the evidence only for legal sufficiency.⁸⁶ The court has the right to consider all the facts.⁸⁷ All of the adverse party's evidence,⁸⁸ or all testimony in support of his pleadings,⁸⁹ must be accepted as true, even though it is contradicted.⁹⁰ The challenged party's evidence is to be viewed in a light most favorable to him⁹¹ together with all reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom,⁹² even though such evidence is contradicted in every particular by opposing evidence in the case.⁹³ The court, however, may weigh the evidence, determine the question of the preponderance thereof, and enter judgment ac-

Request for rulings of law

If at the conclusion of all the evidence in a case tried to the court without a jury, there are questions of law to be decided, they should be raised by request for rulings of law and not under the guise of a motion for a directed verdict.—Taylor v. United Broadcasting Co., D.C.Mun.App., 61 A.2d 480—Zis v. Herman, D.C.Mun.App., 39 A.2d 65.

Plaintiff's motion for judgment on all evidence, in a case tried without a jury, is the equivalent of a motion for a directed verdict and raises question of law whether findings support judgment and whether findings are supported by evidence.—Massachusetts Protective Ass'n v. U. S., C.C.A.Mass., 114 F.2d 364.

92. Ill.—Gubbins v. Glabman, 215 Ill.App. 43.

Motion construed

In action, based on common law and statutory liability, defendants' motion, made to court sitting without jury at close of plaintiff's case, that defendant was "asking for a finding for defendants" did not clearly indicate that defendants intended trial court to weigh the evidence, rather than to pass solely on question of law.—Kovac v. Proof by direct testimony unnecessary

In a trial to court without a jury, plaintiff on defendant's motion for judgment at the close of plaintiff's evidence need not prove essential material facts by direct testimony but they may be inferentially established.—Burkhardt v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 200 S.W.2d 445.

cordingly, if defendant plainly informs the court that such is his desire.⁹⁴ When both parties move for judgment at the conclusion of the trial, they thereby concede that there are no disputed facts in the case.⁹⁵ Where a jury has been waived and all the evidence submitted, it is the duty of the court to determine the issues of law and fact, and the submission of a motion for judgment on issues of law and fact do not in any way change or affect the duty of the court in this respect.⁹⁶

Right to present evidence. Where defendant at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence moves for a finding in his favor and does not, in the motion, reserve the right, in the event the motion is overruled, to introduce his evidence, he has been held not to be precluded from presenting his evidence if he timely requests the right to do so after his motion is overruled.⁹⁷

c. When Granted or Refused

In order to justify a motion for a directed verdict, or similar motion, the evidence must be free from doubt.

In order to justify a directed verdict in a trial by the court, the facts must not only be undisputed, but the inferences from those facts must be so clear that fair-minded men should not differ about them.⁹⁸ A verdict should be directed where the evidence is free from doubt and suspicion and only one verdict can be rendered.⁹⁹ If either one of two inferences may fairly and reasonably be deduced from admitted or uncontradicted facts, there remains in the case a question of fact to be determined by the trial judge,¹ and where the evidence raises a fact issue between the parties a direction of the verdict cannot be granted.² The granting of the motion is improper,³ and the motion is properly refused,⁴ if a directed verdict would have been improper had the case been tried by a jury. It has been held that the giving of a peremptory instruction for defendant is error where the evidence is sufficient to make out a prima facie case for plaintiff;⁵ and that a determination of the case on all the evidence, which is tantamount to a direction of a verdict for defendant, is erroneous, where the evidence and the reasonable inferences are legally sufficient to substantiate plaintiff's claim.⁶ A motion for judgment is properly denied where a finding for the adverse party is warranted.⁷ Where there is no evidence on which a judgment could be found, a motion for judgment cannot be sustained.⁸ Whether a court has erred in denying or granting a motion for judgment made at the close of the evidence is to be determined by ascertaining whether there is substantial evidence fairly tending to establish every element of the opposing party's cause.⁹

Adjudication of no evidence

In a trial without a jury, "the direction of a verdict for defendant," while technically anomalous, is in effect an adjudication that there is no evidence to support plaintiff's claim.—Miller v. Balfour, 49 A.2d 303, 134 N.J.Law 546.

Stipulated facts

Where counsel for both parties agreed to a stipulation of fact and further agreed for the court to determine the issue as a matter of law based only on the pleadings and the stipulation and to direct a verdict for the party entitled thereto, it was held that, under the facts as stipulated, it was not error to direct a verdict in favor of plaintiff.—Kilby v. Sawtell, 46 S.E.2d 117, 203 Ga. 256.

Where plaintiff did not make out his case, due to lack of proof, court was required to grant a motion for a directed verdict.

If there is any evidence to support the challenged party's case the movant must be put to his proof,¹⁰ and it is error, under such circumstances, to grant the motion.¹¹ A motion made at the conclusion of the trial by defendant can be granted only because of utter failure of proof on behalf of plaintiff on the issue involved.¹² A motion for a directed verdict made after the close of all the evidence based on the uncontradicted evidence of plaintiff alone is erroneous for the reason that it would eliminate from the consideration of the court, sitting as a jury, the evidence which has already been adduced by defendant, and such motion is properly refused.¹³

Reservation of decision. It has been held that a statute authorizing a trial court to reserve decision on a motion for a directed verdict and to submit the case to the jury does not apply to a case tried by the court without a jury.¹⁴

§ 597. Declarations of Law

The rules governing declarations of law in cases tried by the court without a jury are considered infra §§ 598-601.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 598. — Necessity, Nature, and Purpose

In a proper case, either party has the right to have the judge declare the theory of the law by which he is governed in reaching his conclusions.

In equity cases, it is not proper practice for courts to give instructions on the law, and a refusal to give requested instructions is not error.¹⁵ In actions at law tried to the court, however, either party has the right to have the judge declare the theory of the law by which he is governed in reaching his conclusions.¹⁶ The fact that the verdict is to be rendered by the court sitting as a jury, it has been said, does not impair the right of either party to a correct statement of the principles by which the decision of the issues of fact should be controlled;¹⁷ these principles are enunciated by so-called declarations of law¹⁸ which are analogous to instructions to the jury,¹⁹ and binding on the court sitting as a

Right to trial by jury

Under some statutes the presentation of propositions of law is proper only where the parties to a cause are entitled to trial by jury, and by agreement have submitted it to the court for trial without a jury.—Lipman v. Goebel, 193 N.E. 203, 357 Ill. 315, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 508, 294 U.S. 712, 79 L.Ed. 1246.—64 C.J. p 1217 note 33 [a].

Requests relating to demurrer

The trial judge was not required to give reasons for his decision in passing on demurrer to the declaration, and hence requests for rulings, considered as relating to the demurrer, had no legal standing so as to be reviewable on report of fact findings.—Everett v. Town of Canton, 21 N.E.2d 269, 303 Mass. 166.

Rulings held not to import special findings of fact

Rulings which were statements on general principles applicable to particular case did not import special findings of fact, contrary to statement in report that the court made no finding or memorandum of facts found.—Memishian v. Phipps, 42 N.E.2d 277, 311 Mass. 521.

Single disconnected fact

A trial judge cannot be compelled to give a ruling on the effect of a single disconnected fact.

jury,²⁰ and it must follow them in making a decision.²¹ Declarations of law are, however, unnecessary where the cause is disposed of without a trial,²² where there is no dispute about the facts,²³ or where the ruling of the court itself showed the principles of law which the court applied to the facts.²⁴

Declarations of law should generally conform in form and substance to the rules established for instructions given to juries,²⁵ and they should be framed in like manner as on trial before a jury.²⁶ It has been held, however, that the same nicety in declarations of law is not required as in instructions to the jury,²⁷ and that if the declarations of law as applied to the evidence show a correct theory, it is immaterial whether they are, in some respects, technically incorrect.²⁸ The trial court hearing the case without a jury is not required to instruct itself as it might the jury on the effect of the evidence in the case,²⁹ and it does not pass on abstract propositions which it may or may not consider controlling merely for the purpose of instructing itself in law.³⁰

Purpose. The purpose of declarations of law is to show, for the information of the appellate court, the theory of law on which the trial court disposed of the case.³¹ In no other way can it be ascertained on what theory of law the court determined the cause.³²

(2) In action for injuries, plaintiff

properly requested a ruling as to whether evidence warranted a finding in his favor since, without such ruling, neither plaintiff nor appellate court could discover whether general finding for defendant was based on failure to find facts essential to recovery or an unexpressed ruling of law that evidence did not warrant a finding for plaintiff.—Strong v. English language Propositions of law submitted by counsel in a case tried without a jury cannot be considered when not in the English language.—Tarjan, for Use of Lefkow, v. National Surety Co., 268 Ill.App. 232.

"And/or"

(1) Propositions of law submitted by counsel to the court in a case tried without a jury should not contain the symbol "and/or."—Tarjan, declarations of law be either inaccurate,³⁵ or meaningless.³⁶ They must state correct principles of law,³⁷ applicable and limited to the issues made by the pleadings and evidence, as discussed infra § 600, and principles of law only should be stated, as considered infra subdivision c of this section.

b. Assumption of Facts

Declarations of law which assume the existence of facts in dispute are erroneous, and a request for such declarations is properly refused.

Declarations of law which assume the existence of facts in dispute are erroneous,³⁸ although the existence of the facts is contradicted by slight evidence only,³⁹ and a request for such declarations is properly refused.⁴⁰ Declarations of law are likewise erroneous where they assume the existence of facts which there is no evidence to support,⁴¹ or which the evidence shows do not exist.⁴² It has been held that there is no error in refusing a request for declarations of law based on assumed facts which the judge was not required to find even on uncontradicted evidence.⁴³

Hypothesizing evidence. As in the case of is-suces of fact tried by a jury, as discussed supra § 382, where the evidence is conflicting, the declarations of law must be predicated on hypothetical statements of the contested facts,⁴⁴ and a declaration of law that plaintiff is entitled to recover is erroneous, where the facts are in dispute.⁴⁵

c. Limiting to Propositions of Law

Declarations of law should state, and are limited to, propositions of law.

Declarations of law should state propositions of law only;⁴⁶ and declarations of law which are simply requests to make specific findings of fact involved in the consideration of the case,⁴⁷ or which present mixed questions of law and fact,⁴⁸ should be refused.

§ 600. — Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence

Declarations of law should not be given where they are not applicable to the issues made by the pleadings, or to the facts in evidence.

Declarations of law must be confined to the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence, and should not be given by the court on its own motion or on request of the parties where they are not applicable to the issues made by the pleadings,⁴⁹ or to the facts in evidence,⁵⁰ although, as considered infra § 601, if declarations of law state correct principles and there is substantial evidence on which to base them, it is not only proper to give them, but the refusal thereof is error, unless they are covered by other declarations given.

While it has been held that no finding of facts by the court prior to the verdict can affect the right of either party to have the court rule on the legal principles involved,⁵¹ generally it has been held that declarations of law which have been held inapplicable to, inconsistent with, or contradictory of, facts found by the court are immaterial and improper and should not be given,⁵² although announce-

Keld requests for rulings

(1) Requested rulings, which were predicated on the law and evidence, constitute requests for rulings though entitled "a motion"—Treasurer and Receiver General v. Tremont Storage Warehouse, 6 N.E.2d 838, 296 Mass. 531.

(2) Passengers' requests that operation of automobile at speed of 60 to 70 miles an hour constituted willful, wanton, and reckless conduct and gross negligence would be assumed to have been requests for rulings of law, and to present questions whether conclusions stated therein were required as a matter of law, notwithstanding requests appeared to be for findings of fact and as such were not required to be given—Kohutynski v. Kohutynski, 5 N.E.2d 345, 296 Mass. 74.

Motion to dismiss

Where a so-called plea in abatement was in substance a motion to dismiss founded solely on the state of the record, no request by plaintiff for a ruling was required, and the judge properly treated its make such request will not, in the absence of statute providing otherwise, preclude the court from entering judgment in his favor.⁵⁸ It has been held that, where defendant did not ask or present any special declarations for the court to pass on, a general declaration of law drawn by the court from the facts was sufficient.⁵⁹ In a trial without a jury, a judge is not required to correct or perfect a request for a ruling, but he may deal with it as presented, since a request is a unit and may be dealt with as such.⁶⁰ The mere presentation of a request for a ruling does not necessarily raise a question of law,⁶¹ and the fact that a request is under a general heading, "requests for rulings," does not transform the request into a request for a ruling of law where its form imports that it is directed to a finding of fact.⁶² The rule that a trial judge cannot be compelled to give rulings of law on the effect of a single disconnected fact cannot be avoided by multiplying requests until they cover the several material facts involved in the decision of the case.⁶³

Oral or written argument. The law which the parties consider applicable may generally be brought to the attention of the court, sitting without a jury, by oral or written argument.⁶⁴ action sustaining the plea as a "ruling."—Tobin v. Downey, 39 N.E.2d 757, 310 Mass. 721.

Effect of requested ruling held not impaired

In action against operator of public garage for loss of furs stolen from plaintiff's automobile while in storage with defendant overnight, effect of requested ruling that the evidence did not warrant a finding that attention of defendant or its servants was called to storage of furs inside closed automobile was not impaired by trial judge's additional comment that attention of defendant's agent was called to fact that automobile contained valuable merchandise.—Greenberg v. Shoppers' Garage, 105 N.E.2d 839, 329 Mass. 31.

"Decision" of land court

On question ordinarily arising on a "decision" of land court, whether ultimate order or determination is correct in law in facts stated, requests for rulings have no standing since the question is fully open on appeal without them.—Harrington v. Joyce, 55 N.E.2d 30, 316 Mass. 187.

Word "justified," as used in request for ruling that court is justified in vacating judgment obtained by default through negligence or mistake of petitioner's former attorney, means a decision reached on adequate reasons sufficiently supported by credible evidence when weighed by unprejudiced mind guided by common sense and by correct rules of law.—Kravetz v. Lipofsky, 200 N.E. 865, 294 Mass. 80.

Request that on all of evidence plaintiff was entitled to recover was not a request for a ruling that the evidence warranted a finding for the plaintiff.—Howard v. Malden Sav. Bank, 15 N.E.2d 233, 300 Mass. 208.

"Case stated." In a case heard on an agreed statement of facts, which constituted a "case stated," requests for rulings have been held to amount only to argument on agreed facts.⁶⁵ Where a case is heard on an agreed statement of facts, which constitute a "case stated," there is no need for requests for rulings of law.⁶⁶

Purpose. The purpose of a request for a declaration of law in an action tried to a judge sitting without a jury is to require the trial judge in his strictly judicial capacity to instruct himself as the fact-finding tribunal with respect to the relevant law in order to make sure that his general finding is not the result of an erroneous view of the law.⁶⁷

Stating points in which variance claimed to exist. Under a statute providing that the question of variance between pleadings and proof shall not be considered as having been raised by any prayer or instruction unless it states specifically the points wherein it is claimed that a variance exists, if the theory on which a requested declaration is based is that there can be no recovery because of a variance between the pleadings and proof, the request should specifically designate the point at which the Request that trial judge "find as a fact and rule" that injury was caused by the concurrent causes of the force used by defendant and the resistance of plaintiff, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover nominal damages only, was primarily a request for a fact finding.—*Gosselin v. b. Time for Making

Requests for declarations of law must be seasonably made.

In order to entitle a party to declarations of law, requests therefor must be seasonably made; if not so made, they may, and ordinarily should, be refused,⁶⁹ except in cases where the delay in making the request is due to inadvertence or misapprehension on the part of counsel.⁷⁰ On the other hand, if proper requests are seasonably presented⁷¹ it is error to refuse them, the duty imposed on courts to pass on requests for declarations of law being mandatory when they are presented in time.⁷² Requests are not made in time and should be refused when presented on the hearing of a motion for a new trial,⁷³ or when presented after judgment,⁷⁴ since the court is without power to grant permission to submit declarations of law after judgment.⁷⁵ It has been held that requests for declarations of law are not made in time and are properly refused when presented after announcement by the court of its finding of facts,⁷⁶ or decision,⁷⁷ in the absence of any showing of surprise.⁷⁸

On the other hand, if the time for presenting the request is not fixed by statute or rule of court, it has been held that it is error to refuse a request made at any time before a final decision.⁷⁹ It has also been held, however, that requests must be presented before the cause is submitted to the court and are properly refused if this is not done where it is provided by statute that when the evidence is concluded and before the case is argued and submitted to the court sitting as a jury, either party may move the court to give instructions on any point of law arising in the cause.⁸⁰

The trial court may permit a party to withdraw his propositions of law, even after the court has announced its findings in the case.

It is not error in the trial court to permit a party to withdraw his propositions of law,⁸¹ even after the court has announced its findings in the case.⁸² As long as the court and the party presenting the propositions are content with this course, no one else can complain,⁸³ and if the adverse party desires to raise the same questions and have them passed on by the court, he should present them himself.⁸⁴

d. Allowance or Refusal

Where declarations of law state correct principles, and there is substantial evidence on which to base them, it is not only proper to give them, but the refusal thereof has been held to constitute error.

Where declarations of law state correct principles, and there is substantial evidence on which to base them,⁸⁵ and they are seasonably made, as discussed

Finding

(1) Granting a request that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the court in finding for the defendant was not inconsistent with finding for the plaintiff.—Wood v. Spedoni, 104 N.E.2d 491, 328 Mass. 483.

(2) In action for personal injuries, a ruling that evidence warrants a finding for plaintiff does not preclude judge from finding for defendant on the evidence.—Strong v. Haverhill Elec. Co., 13 N.E.2d 39, 299 Mass. 455.

(3) Where a general finding for defendant follows judge's refusal of plaintiff's requested ruling that evidence warrants a finding for plaintiff, general finding is deemed the result of a ruling that evidence does not warrant a finding for plaintiff.—Strong v. Haverhill Elec. Co., supra.

(4) Refusal of defendant's request for a directed finding was equivalent to a ruling that the evidence warranted a finding for plaintiff.—Irving v. Bonjorno, 99 N.E.2d 643, 327 Mass. 518.

Findings held not inconsistent

(1) In a law action tried without jury refusal of plaintiff's request for a ruling that on all the evidence a finding for plaintiff was required as matter of law was not inconsistent with the granting of requested rulings which were statements of general principles applicable to the case and merely rulings that certain findings were warranted by evidence.—Memishian v. Phipps, 42 N.E.2d 277, 311 Mass. 521.

(2) It would not have been inconsistent for judge to have granted request for ruling that evidence warranted a finding for defendant and then, after weighing all the evidence, to have found for plaintiff.—Dangelo v. Farina, 39 N.E.2d 754, 310 Mass. 758.

Error held not cured

A general finding for defendant does not go to extent of curing an error in refusal of plaintiff's request for ruling that there was evidence to warrant a finding for plaintiff.—Bern v. Boston Consol. Gas Co., 39 N.E.2d 576, 310 Mass. 651.—Home Sav. Bank v. Savransky, 30 N.E.2d 831, 307 Mass. 601.

Finding held not required

Granting of request that there was sufficient evidence, if believed, to warrant finding for defendants in action on note, did not require finding in favor of defendants as matter of law.—First Nat. Bank v. Sheridan, 189 N.E. 71, 285 Mass. 338.

Allowance of four of five subdivisions of request, headed by statement that upon evidence plaintiff could not recover, indicated that judge did not rule generally that on all evidence plaintiff could not recover, but that he adopted subdivisions without such conclusion.—Woodman v. Haynes, 193 N.E. 570, 289 Mass. 114.

argument are properly refused.⁹¹ It has been held that peremptory declarations of law in a case tried by the court without a jury may only be given under such circumstances as would warrant the giving of a peremptory instruction in a case tried to a jury.⁹² The court need not state reasons for declining to give requests for a declaration of law.⁹³

Filing. The delay of the trial judge in filing the disposition of the requests for rulings until after he had filed his findings has been held not to constitute error at law.⁹⁴

Declarations good in part and bad in part. Where requested declarations are good in part and bad in part, they may be properly refused;⁹⁵ the court is not obliged to separate the good from the bad.⁹⁶ Where the court refused to allow improper declarations of law, it need not formulate declarations of its own,⁹⁷ although it is the better practice for it to do so.⁹⁸

Length and number of declarations. According to one view, the number of declarations presented is no reason for refusing to pass on them; when they are properly presented, the court should pass on a sufficient number of them to cover all legal questions in the case.⁹⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that requested declarations may be refused on the ground of their bulk and number alone,¹ or the trial judge may require a party to reduce them to a reasonable number, or risk the loss of any rights under them.² It has also been held that the trial judge may require a party, in view of the great number of requests presented, to specify the requests for rulings thought not to be fairly covered by the charge.³

Acts tantamount to allowance or refusal. Where the court, through error or inadvertence, fails to mark declarations of law submitted "given" or "refused," the effect is precisely the same as if they had been formally marked and refused.⁴ Ordinarily, where the court fails to pass on a request for a declaration of law, this is tantamount to a refusal thereof.⁵ It has been held, however, that the admission of evidence is tantamount to a declaration of law that it is admissible, and a refusal to make a formal declaration of law to that effect is not erroneous.⁶

Objections and exceptions. Where a mere general objection to the action of the court in refusing propositions of law is made, error, if any, is deemed to have been waived.⁷ It has been held that when a request is refused, an exception to a refusal to grant it must be sustained, unless the ground of refusal is distinctly stated,⁹ or it plainly appears in some way on the record,⁹ or it is obvious that no harm is done or rights endangered by the refusal.¹⁰ Where, at the close of the evidence, requests for rulings are made and the trial judge makes his findings without passing specifically on the requests, an exception may be taken to the implied denial of the requested rulings.¹¹ The trial justice's statement, in reply to a request to note an exception to a refusal of requests for rulings of law, that he would not do so, has been held to be immaterial, where such exception was shown by the transcript and set forth in the bill of exceptions as allowed by the trial justice.¹²

(2) Refusal of requested findings for defendant on all the evidence, where defendant did not specify grounds for his request, was proper under court rule.—Garrett v. M. McDonough Co., 7 N.E.2d 417, 297 Mass. 58.

e. Modification and Correction

In a proper case the court may modify or correct a declaration of law.

Where so provided by statute, the court may modify a declaration of law.¹³ The trial judge may at any time prior to the entry of final judgment correct his declarations of law in order that justice may be done.¹⁴

§ 602. Decision

In cases tried by the court without a jury, whether in equity or at law, there must be a decision of the court. The findings of fact and conclusions of law may constitute the decision of the court.

In cases tried by the court without a jury, whether in equity or at law, there must be a decision of the court,¹⁵ although the evidence as to some material fact may not be entirely clear.¹⁶ The parties are entitled to a decision by the judge who heard the evidence,¹⁷ and they cannot be compelled to accept a decision on the facts from another judge.¹⁸ The decision is the basis of the judgment to be entered in the case,¹⁹ and it is analogous to the verdict of a jury.²⁰ In jurisdictions where the court trying a cause without a jury is required to make findings of fact and conclusions of law, as discussed infra § 610, the findings of fact and conclusions of law constitute the decision of the court²¹ when other

"Order for judgment"

Volition of court

The provision of the code that the court trying the facts without a jury shall dictate or prepare and file a statement announcing the ground for its decision if requested by any party before final submission, does not exclude the right of the court to make such a statement of its own volition.—Pudewitz v. statutory requirements, such as putting them in writing,²² signing them,²³ ordering judgment thereon,²⁴ and filing with the clerk,²⁵ have been complied with. The decision of the trial judge is to be found in his rescript and not in oral statements made at the conclusion of the trial.²⁶ In deciding a case a court may out of consideration for the parties involved and the necessities of the case refrain from reciting the respective tendencies of the evidence.²⁷ A valid decision may under certain circumstances be announced in the judge's chambers.²⁸

A mere opinion of the court,²⁹ or an announcement of a decision not reduced to writing,³⁰ or an oral announcement of the judge's views at the conclusion of the trial,³¹ or an oral announcement that the action would be dismissed,³² or a minute entry by the court directing that findings and decree be drawn in favor of defendant,³³ or a memorandum decision not amounting to a formal order,³⁴ or a mere statement of reasons for not taking the case under advisement,³⁵ or a notation by the court that "the foregoing requested findings are found as above modified as marked," and the mere conclusion of law that plaintiffs were entitled to a judgment in the absence of any specific direction that judgment be entered,³⁶ do not constitute a decision, and are not binding on the court,³⁷ but may be changed or altered at the will of the court.³⁸ It has been held that a decision rendered by the court may be corrected before a judgment has been rendered thereon.³⁹

Mental processes. The trial judge in trying a case without a jury has the right to announce the mental processes by which he determines the credibility of witnesses and by which he arrives at conclusions.⁴⁰

Notice. When a decision is rendered in an action heard by the court without a jury, the clerk may be required to give written notice thereof to the parties or their attorneys.⁴¹

Form and language

Statute providing that court trying facts without a jury shall dictate or prepare and file statement announcing ground for its decision if requested before final submission, does not require court to answer specifically every interrogatory submitted by a litigant, and court may determine relevancy of interrogatory and whether request involved a principal fact issue and may then prepare opinion in such form and language as may best express its views and findings.—Dubinsky v. Lindburg Cadillac Co., Mo.App., 250 S.W.2d 830.

Request held complied with

Request that trial court prepare and file brief opinion containing statement of grounds for decision and method of determining any damages that might be awarded plaintiff, was complied with where court, at time of entering judgment, filed an opinion which included its findings on all principal fact issues raised by pleadings and supported by evidence.—*Dubinsky v. a. In General

The decision in an action tried by the court without a jury must be based on the evidence admitted in the case.

The decision must be based on evidence admitted in the case,⁴⁶ and not on what the court may have learned or known outside the record,⁴⁷ and must be uninfluenced by the judge's recollection of testimony given by any witness on the trial of another case.⁴⁸ So the judge should not reach a final decision until he has heard all the evidence which a party is prepared to offer and has the right to introduce.⁴⁹ Decisions should be based on the record and law as expressed in statutes and authorities and not on the contents of scientific books.⁵⁰ The statutes usually require the decision to state separately the facts found and the conclusions of law, as discussed infra § 624, or to state concisely the grounds on which the issues have been decided,⁵¹ or the reasons for the decision.⁵²

Decision held sufficient

A decision which was equivalent to express findings of fact in favor of plaintiff on all of material facts alleged was in conformity with provision of Civil Practice Act providing for form of decision upon trial by the court.—Schoengold v. Bler, 49 N.Y.S.2d 212, 268 App. Div. 832.

Decision held insufficient

Judgment dismissing action to impress a trust on realty on stated ground that plaintiff had not made out a case was insufficient to comply with statute dealing with form of decision, in absence of statement of the facts deemed essential by trial court or the allegations of complaint as to which trial court concluded plaintiff had not sustained the burden of proof.—*Williams v. b. Matters to Be Determined

In cases tried by the court without a jury, it is the duty of the court to pass on all issues raised by the pleadings and evidence material to a determination of the case, and a failure or refusal to do so is error.

In cases tried by the court without a jury, it is the duty of the court to pass on all issues raised by the pleadings and evidence material to a determination of the case, and a failure or refusal to do so is error.⁵⁴

It may decide a case on any point raised by the pleadings and evidence, whether or not insisted on by the parties.⁵⁵ On the other hand, the court should not find on issues not raised by the pleadings,⁵⁶ not argued,⁵⁷ and not essential to a decision of the cause.⁵⁸

c. Writing and Signing

Decisions of a court trying a case without a jury are very generally required by statute to be in writing, and to be signed by the judge.

Decisions of a court trying a case without a jury are very generally required by statute to be in writing.⁵⁹ These statutes are held to be mandatory,⁶⁰ and the fact that a jury are used in an advisory capacity does not relieve the court of the necessity of making a decision in writing,⁶¹ although the court adopts the verdict of the jury.⁶² Refusal of the court on request to render a decision in writing is fatal to the judgment.⁶³ It has been held, however, that a finding may be orally announced in open court,⁶⁴ and the oral announcement of a finding is analogous to the rendition of a judgment.⁶⁵

d. Filing and Directing Entry of Judgment

Where a statute so requires the decision must be filed with the clerk of court, and the decision must direct entry of judgment thereon.

The statutes usually require the decisions of a court trying a case without a jury to be filed with the clerk of court.⁶⁷ The statutes are mandatory,⁶⁸ and prior to filing, no judgment can be entered,⁶⁹ filing being necessary to effectuate the final judgment.⁷⁰ Affixing of filing marks by the clerk, a ministerial duty, is not meant by the term "filing."⁷¹

Directing entry of judgment. So, also, it has been held, under some statutes, that the decision must direct entry of judgment thereon.⁷²

§ 604. — Time for Rendition and Filing

a. In general

b. As affected by constitutional or statutory provisions

a. In General

In the absence of statutory regulation, the time within which a judge may decide a case submitted to him for decision is largely a matter of discretion.

In the absence of statutory regulation, the time within which a judge may decide a case submitted to him for decision is largely a matter of discretion,⁷³ and he may take the case under advisement for a reasonable time, although such time extend beyond the term of the court at which the case was tried.⁷⁴ It has been held, however, that if he prologues his decision for an unreasonable length of time, so that his conduct amounts to an abuse of discretion, he may, by proper proceedings, be compelled to decide the case.⁷⁵ Mere announcement of the decision before adoption of findings of fact is not error.⁷⁶

Rendering decision before day set. When the trial court, at the close of the testimony, sets a day for its decision, a decision for defendant, rendered before such a day, in the absence of plaintiff and without notice to him, constitutes reversible error, since it deprives plaintiff of his right to take a nonsuit.⁷⁷

Fixing day for filing brief. Where defendant's attorney was given until a certain date in which to file his brief, the justice has been held not to be compelled to wait until that time before giving his decision, provided defendant files his brief prior thereto.⁷⁸

b. As Affected by Constitutional or Statutory Provisions

Under a number of statutes and constitutional provisions, decisions in cases tried without a jury should be rendered and filed within a designated time after the cause is submitted, but such provisions have been declared to be directory only.

Cause held submitted

apolis Builders' Supply Co., 252 N.W. 442, 190 Minn. 576.

Error held not shown

In action on account, where the defense was a novation, defendant was bound by testimony he had adduced, which showed that parties had reached no final agreement and that there had been no novation, and, therefore, trial judge did not err in assuming that witnesses which defendant had yet to offer would substantiate defendant's testimony, and in deciding cause before hearing such other witnesses.—Blaylock v. not deprive the court of jurisdiction to decide the case and file its decision at a later date,⁷⁹ or affect the validity of a judgment based on a decision so rendered.⁸⁰ In most decisions in which the foregoing views were enunciated it was expressly declared that provisions of this character are directory only;⁸¹ and it has been stated in effect in numerous decisions, as a ground for holding the provisions to be directory, that, since the parties have no control over the action of the court, they should not be punished for its dereliction of duty.⁸²

Waiver. Where counsel for parties submitted the cause to the trial judge and agreed to await his convenience, notwithstanding the judge's statement that he was going to the hospital, counsel waived the filing of a decision within the time provided by statute.⁸³ The failure of the trial judge to render judgment at least two days before the end of the trial term, as required by a rule of court, may be waived by the parties litigant, and defendant cannot object to a judgment rendered on the day preceding the close of the term, where he stood by at the time and made no protest.⁸⁴

der advisement for a period longer than that prescribed by statute without objection, the presumption will be indulged that it had a lawful excuse for the delay.⁸⁵

Time of rendition by visiting judge. A statute which authorizes a visiting judge to transmit in writing the decision and entry of judgment after ten days' notice applies only where the visiting judge does not return to the county of the trial but mails the decision to the clerk.⁸⁶ If he comes back and actually renders judgment from the bench in the county of trial, the rule is the same as when the judgment is rendered by a local judge.⁸⁷

§ 605. — Rendition in Absence of Counsel

The rendition of a final decision in the absence of counsel, in a proper case, is not error.

Rendition of a final decision in the absence of counsel is not error where the papers in the case had been before the court during the progress of the trial, and the judge had them accurately in his mind when he rendered the decision, and where, at the time of the decision, counsel had absented himself without leave and had the papers in his possession.⁸⁸ It has been held, however, that, where

§ 606. — Amendment and Objections or Exceptions

A decision rendered by the court without a jury cannot be amended for the purpose of amplifying it. Objections and exceptions lie to the decision or to the rulings of the court on questions of law only.

A decision rendered by the court in a trial without a jury cannot be amended for the purpose of amplifying it.⁹⁰ One of the effects of such a practice, it has been said, would be to extend the time for filing and prosecuting exceptions. To permit this to be done would be to nullify the statutes relating to exceptions and the procedure thereunder.⁹¹

On a trial of a cause by the court without a jury, exceptions lie to the decision or to rulings of the court on questions of law only;⁹² and under some statutes no exceptions lie even to decisions or rulings on matters of law unless the parties in the agreement to submit the cause to the court for trial without a jury expressly reserve the right to except,⁹³ and such rule applies even if the final decision is erroneous as a matter of law.⁹⁴ The right to except for supposed errors of decision is not affected by the absence of a written finding by the circuit judge.⁹⁵ Exceptions must be written and filed, and not taken orally.⁹⁶

§ 608. Withdrawal of Submission and Appointment of Special Judge

Under some statutes the submission of an issue may be withdrawn, and a special judge appointed to take jurisdiction thereof.

Under some statutes it is provided that if the judge fails to determine any issue of law or fact within ninety days after having taken it under advisement, on written application of any of the parties or their attorneys, duly filed in the clerk's office and called to the attention of the court before the announcement of the decision of the issue in question, the submission of the issue shall thereupon be withdrawn, and the judge before whom the cause is pending shall be disqualified to hear or determine any of the issues in the cause, and a special judge shall be appointed to take jurisdiction thereof, and such statutes, it has been held, create an optional procedural privilege which may be waived.² No arrangement between the court and one party to the action can effect a withdrawal of the cause from the advisement of the court.³ A motion to withdraw a submission and appoint a special judge must be overruled where the moving party is responsible for,⁴ or consents to,⁵ the delay of the court in determining the issues. It is the duty of the trial court, on its own motion, to include in the record any facts which constitute a waiver of the privilege to compel withdrawal of submission, when these facts come to the knowledge of the judge in his capacity as judge of the cause.⁶

B. FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

§ 609. In General

- a. General considerations; definitions
- b. Nature and purpose

a. General Considerations; Definitions

A "finding of fact" is a statement of the ultimate facts on which the law of the case must determine the rights of the parties, and is a finding of the propositions of fact which the evidence establishes. "Conclusions of law" are those conclusions which the trial judge concludes flow from the ultimate facts.

The term "finding" ordinarily imports the ascertainment of facts by a judge,⁷ in a judicial proceeding,⁸ his decision on those facts,⁹ resulting in the best judgment of the court of what the entire evidence establishes,¹⁰ and is the all-important and all-inclusive basis for judgment.¹¹ The term commonly applies to the result reached by a judge.¹² The term "finding" is never used in the statutes or in common parlance, to designate the decision of the appellate court on appeal,¹³ or the sitting of a court in banc,¹⁴ since such courts generally have no fact-finding powers. Sometimes, however, as a matter of interpretation it has been treated as a ruling of law.¹⁵

The phrase "findings of fact" has been defined as meaning a statement of the ultimate facts¹⁶ on which the law of the case must determine the rights of the parties, and are findings of the propositions of fact which the evidence establishes, and not the evidence on which those ultimate facts are supposed to rest.¹⁷ It has also been defined as the determination by a court, found on the evidence of a fact averred by one party and denied by the other,¹⁸ or the written statement of each issuable fact established by the evidence,¹⁹ or a conclusion by way of reasonable inference from the evidence.²⁰

"Conclusions of law" are those conclusions which the trial judge concludes flow from the ultimate facts as he finds them illuminated by subsidiary facts,²¹ and to arrive at and to apply legal conclusions is the function of the court.²² Where a conclusion describes a legal status, or condition, or a legal offense, it is ordinarily termed a "conclusion of law;"²³ and where the ultimate conclusion can be arrived at only by applying a rule of law, the result so reached embodies a conclusion of law.²⁴ The phrase has been contrasted with "allegation of fact" in the definition of Allegation 3 C.J.S., p. 884, note 67, "finding of fact,"²⁵ "conclusion of fact,"²⁶ and "ultimate fact."²⁷

b. Nature and Purpose

The making of findings of fact and conclusions of law is for the protection of both the court and the parties. The purpose of such findings and conclusions is to dispose of the issues raised by the pleadings, and to facilitate a review of the cause if there is an appeal.

The making of findings of fact and conclusions of law is for the protection of both court and parties.²⁸ The purpose of such findings and conclusions is to dispose of the issues raised by the pleadings,²⁹ facilitate a review of the cause if there is an appeal³⁰ by exhibiting the exact grounds on which the judgment rests,³¹ and to enable the appellate court to determine whether the judgment appealed from is supported by sufficient facts.³²

Guarantees fair trial

The rule requiring courts to make basic findings of fact is designed to insure the decision of cases according to the evidence and law, rather than arbitrarily and in derogation of facts and issues involved, and to apprise parties and reviewing court of bases and validity of decisions thus rendered and avoid situations in which reviewing court is left to surmise as to what actually occurred at trial.—Sanders Bros. Radio Station v. Failure to make finding

Failure to make finding on a material issue results in prejudicial error entitling complaining party to reversal if it appears from record that there was evidence introduced as to such issue and the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding in favor of such party.—Bertrand v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 115 P.2d 228, 46 Cal.App.2d 7.

Means to set aside judgment

Basis of decision

Conn.—Hoyt v. City of Stamford, 165 A. 357, 116 Conn. 402.

Important right of litigant is to have a statement of facts, in a proper case on which the judgment was based, whereas the statement of the legal conclusion of the court, aside from its judgment, is unimportant.—Shunk v. Shunk Mfg. Co., 93 N.E.2d 321, 86 Ohio App. 467.

Theory of case

Object of findings of fact in a case tried without a jury is to ascertain the theory on which the judge decided the case.

Ill.—Tarjan, for Use of Lefkow, v. National Surety Co., 268 Ill.App. 232.

32. Utah.—In re Peterson, 48 P.2d 468, 87 Utah 144.

Traverse same ground as trial court

Under statute, the courts must make such specific findings of ultimate facts as will enable the appellate court in reviewing such findings and the conclusions to traverse the same ground as the trial court.—Porter v. Mesilla Val. Cotton Products, 76 P.2d 937, 42 N.M. 217.

Findings in accordance with law

Usually, facts may be separated from law by requests for rulings in order to enable reviewing court to determine whether general finding of trial court was permissible in accordance with law on facts found by him.—Langdoe v. Gevaert Co. of America, 51 N.E.2d 780, 315 Mass. 8.

Findings not mere technicality

"When a decision is accompanied by findings of fact, the reviewing court may decide whether the decision reached by the court or commission follows as a matter of law from the facts stated as its basis, and also whether the facts so stated have any substantial support in the evidence. In the absence of findings of fact the reviewing tribunal can determine neither of these things. The requirement of findings is thus far from a technicality. On the contrary, it is

Findings of fact also serve the purpose of aiding a party to determine whether they warrant the legal conclusions reached by the court in rendering judgment in the case,³³ thus allowing a party specifically to assign error to such conclusions of fact or law as are claimed to be erroneous,³⁴ to the end that the trial court may withdraw or correct and amend them.³⁵ Since a request for findings is with a view of excepting to a decision on questions of law, until a party entitled to findings has them, he cannot determine what assignments of error he may desire to assert, and without such findings the reviewing court cannot consider his assignments of error.³⁶ Findings of fact also avoid the necessity of an extended bill of exceptions on review.³⁷ In analogy to a finding by the jury, discussed supra § 491, where the finding of the court with respect to the facts may be either general or special, the court finds a general verdict on all the issues for plaintiff or defendant or its finds a special verdict.³⁸ The findings by the trial court constitute the actual decision of the court.³⁹ Once a judge has made his findings of fact, his functions as a trier of fact are ended, and his subsequent actions are performed in the capacity of a judge of the court.⁴⁰

§ 610. General Authority and Duty to Make

In some jurisdictions the court is not bound and cannot be compelled to make special findings of fact in an action at law tried before it without a jury, but under some statutes and rules of court a mandatory duty is placed on court to state findings of fact and conclusions of law.

In some jurisdictions, in the absence of a statute or rule of court to the contrary,⁴¹ the court is not bound and cannot be compelled to make special findings of fact in an action at law tried before it without a jury,⁴² although it may, in its discreto insure against Star Chamber methods, to make certain that justice shall be administered according to facts and law."—Saginaw Broadcasting Co. v. Necessity of finding ultimate facts see infra § 629.

At common law

The finding of an issue of fact by the court on the evidence, either with or without the consent of parties, was a proceeding unknown at the common law.

U.S.—Wear v. Mayer, C.C.Mo., 6 R. 658, 2 McCrary 172, 3 C.J. p 611 note 16.

Matters of fact

Plaintiff was not entitled to and judge could not be required to make requested finding on stated grounds dealing only with matters of fact, particularly where, instead of stating such facts hypothetically, plaintiff assumed the truth of the matters contained in such grounds and on such assumptions requested not only a ruling of law as to each of them, but also an implied finding of all the facts involved in each of the alleged grounds, even though judge in refusing such request made findings on most of the material matters embraced in such grounds.—Strachan v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 73 N.E.2d 840, 321 Mass. 507.

Express or implied findings

On the law side of court, a judge cannot be required to make any express or implied findings of fact.—Liberatore v. Town of Frammingham, 63 N.E.2d 561, 315 Mass. 538.

Ordinary rule

Where there was nothing to take case out of ordinary rule that a trial judge sitting without a jury in a law action is not required, even on request, to make special findings of fact, judge was not required to make special findings of fact with respect to grounds specified in plaintiff's request for ruling which raised question whether, on all the evidence, a finding for plaintiff was required as matter of law.—Memishian v. Phipps, 42 N.E.2d 277, 311 Mass. 521.

tion, do so.⁴³ Under some statutes and rules of court, however, on the trial of a case before it without a jury, the court must, as a basis of its judgment, state findings of fact and conclusions of law,⁴⁴ unless they are waived, as discussed infra § 613; but a failure to do so does not render a judgment entered thereon absolutely void.⁴⁵ The mandatory provision of such statutes includes an obligation on the part of the court to answer all interrogatories involving the ultimate facts of the controversy,⁴⁶ and a trial court which refuses a party's requested findings of fact and conclusions of law

Itemization of damages

(1) In the absence of a statute to the contrary the court need not itemize damages in its findings.—Ferguson v. Rochford, 79 A. 177, 84 Conn. 202, Ann.Cas.1912B 1212.

(2) Where the cause is tried by the court, the court need not segregate in its findings the amount of actual damages from the amount given as exemplary damages, in the absence of a request.—Foley v. Martin, 71 P. 165, 75 P. 842, 142 Cal. 256, 100 Am.S.R. 123.

Amendment of rule to include equity cases

(1) Superior Court rule which requires trial court to make findings of fact in all cases legal or equitable does not require findings of fact and conclusions of law where they were not formerly required in actions at law.—State ex rel. Washington Water Power Co. v. Superior Court for Chelan County, 250 P.2d 536, 41 Wash.2d 484.

(2) The rule as amended adds nothing new to law cases, since the rule as to law cases restates a statutory rule, and the rule applies not only where there is judgment for plaintiff, but also where the judgment is for the defendant, where there has been a complete trial on the merits.—Bowman v. Webster, 253 P.2d 934, 42 Wash.2d 129.

Findings as basis for costs

(1) Under V.A.M.S. § 510.310 and similar earlier statutes, in the absence of a specific request by counsel for findings on any of the principal controverted fact issues, the court may make a finding of facts.—Conley v. Crown Coach Co., 159 S.W. 2d 281, 348 Mo. 1243—Swanson, Inc. v. Central Surety & Insurance Corp., 121 S.W.2d 783, 343 Mo. 350.

(2) Other particulars of rule under Missouri statutes see 64 C.J. p 1228 note 21 [b].

In Oregon

(1) In the trial of a case before a judge without a jury in a law action, the judge is not required to file conclusions of law.—Howard v. Klamath County, 215 P.2d 362, 188 Or. 205.

(2) Under statute authorizing any litigant to object to findings made by trial court and to request other different or additional findings, trial court has discretion to determine whether findings shall be general or special.—Howard v. Klamath County, 215 P.2d 362, 188 Or. 205—Ersvat v. Sterling, 68 P.2d 137, 156 Or. 432.

(3) If trial court elects to make special findings within its discretion, it is not bound to make findings on every matter requested by a litigant.—Howard v. Klamath County, 215 P.2d 362, 188 Or. 205.

against the state before a court of claims is within a statute requiring findings of fact and conclusions of law.⁶⁰ A statute requiring findings where questions of fact are tried by a court is applicable in an action for declaratory relief where questions of fact are put in issue by pleadings.⁶¹ It is not objectionable for a judge to include in his judgment fact findings in proceedings had in vacation.⁶²

b. Suit in Equity

In some jurisdictions, in a suit of an equitable nature, the trial court is not required to state findings of fact and conclusions of law, but in other jurisdictions findings are necessary.

Where a judge is not required to comply with a request for specific findings of fact in an action at law, compliance with such a request is not required in an equity case.⁶³ In some jurisdictions statutes requiring the trial court to state findings of fact and conclusions of law are deemed applicable only in actions at law and not in suits in equity;⁶⁴ so that a trial court need not make special findings of fact,⁶⁵ or conclusions of law,⁶⁶ although it may in its discretion do so.⁶⁷ In other jurisdictions findings are necessary in an equity case⁶⁸ when requested,⁶⁹ and not waived.⁷⁰ Also a trial court may make ancillary findings to controlling issues found by a jury to support a decree which the court may enter pursuant to its power to grant full relief in an equity suit.⁷¹ A statute which requires a chancellor to file written findings of fact, has no application to a case tried by a jury demanded by the parties.⁷²

- b. Agreed or stipulated facts
- c. Dismissal or nonsuit
- d. Jury trial
- e. Direction of verdict or motion therefor

a. In General

Under some statutes findings of fact are necessary in a case tried to a court without a jury where fact questions are raised by the pleadings and evidence.

A code or statutory provision requiring findings of fact and conclusions of law is applicable and must be complied with where an action within the scope of the code or statutory provision is tried and determined on the merits by the court without a jury,⁷³ and issues or controverted questions of fact are raised by the pleadings and evidence,⁷⁴ and the making of such findings and conclusions is properly and seasonably requested⁷⁵ and not waived⁷⁶ by a party. On the other hand, findings are not necessary where no issue of fact is presented by the pleadings and evidence,⁷⁷ where judgment is rendered by default,⁷⁸ by consent,⁷⁹ or on the pleadings, as discussed in Pleading § 508(2) b, or where there has been no inquiry as to the facts,⁸⁰ or where the question decided is one of law.⁸¹ Likewise, findings of fact are not required where the trial court hears no evidence,⁸² where special exceptions to the pleadings are sustained,⁸³ where the court has disposed of the issues presented by a written and signed opinion and the parties have been directed to submit a judgment on notice in accordance.⁸⁴ or where the constitutionality of a statute can be determined from the face of the statute.⁸⁵ The trial court has been held not to be required to make a finding on a controverted issue where testimony of the parties is flatly contradictory so that evidence on that particular point is evenly balanced and the court in determining credibility cannot conclude that one of the parties has testified truthfully and the other falsely.⁸⁶

It is generally held that findings of fact are unnecessary where the case is submitted on an agreed statement or stipulation of facts which stipulates all the ultimate facts essential to support a judgment.

Except in a few jurisdictions,⁸⁷ findings of fact are deemed unnecessary where the case is submitted on an agreed statement or stipulation of facts⁸⁸ which embraces all⁸⁹ the ultimate⁹⁰ facts essential to support a judgment.⁹¹ It is otherwise, however, where a stipulation or agreed statement embraces only detailed, evidentiary, or probative facts.⁹² Also where a stipulation is entered into by the parties to an action, but the taking of evidence on contested matters not covered by the stipulation is necessary, findings of fact are necessary to support a valid judgment.⁹³ Notwithstanding an agreed statement of facts which renders findings of fact unnecessary, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the court may make findings;⁹⁴ but in other jurisdictions it has been held that findings of fact by the court in such case are unauthorized⁹⁵ and the judgment is not to be tested thereby.⁹⁶ Unsworn statements by counsel, not intended to be, and not amounting to, stipulations of fact, do not constitute evidence in harmony with which a trial court is bound to make a finding.⁹⁷

c. Dismissal or Nonsuit

Findings of fact are proper and necessary where there is a dismissal after the determination of an issue of fact involving inferences and conclusions of fact, and the evidence is not such as to require a finding as a matter of law against the plaintiff.

While it has been held or stated generally that findings of fact are improper and unnecessary where there is a dismissal or nonsuit,⁹⁸ in an action tried either by the court⁹⁹ or by a jury,¹ and this is undoubtedly true where there is a failure to prove a simple fact and the evidence is such that, as a matter of law there can be no recovery,² it is otherwise where there is a dismissal on the merits after the determination of an issue of fact involving inferences and conclusions of fact,³ and the evidence, although sufficient to sustain a finding for defendant, is not such as to require, as a matter of law, a finding against plaintiff.⁴ Under some statutes findings of fact and conclusions of law are necessary even though the trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence or a motion to dismiss.⁵ At the close of the evidence produced by a party who has the burden of proof, a motion to dismiss which is amended to become a motion for judgment is properly considered by a trial court as a motion to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support any claim of such party, rather than of a motion for nonsuit, and a court on granting the motion is justified in making and entering findings of fact.⁶

As a general rule conclusions of law and findings of fact are unnecessary in an action tried before a jury, unless the court renders judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or the cause is of equitable cognizance.

When dismissal deemed on merits

(1) Dismissal of complaint after plaintiff rests is deemed to be on merits, so as to require fact findings by court, but presumption is subject to direction of trial court whether dismissal occurs before or after close of plaintiff's case.—Ten Eyck v. Lombard, 236 N.Y.S. 49, 162 Misc. 517.

(2) Decision by trial court on defendant's motion to dismiss complaint at close of plaintiff's case will be deemed to be on merits, rather than nonsuit, so as to require fact findings, where defendant rests his case on testimony of plaintiff's witnesses or proves his case by making them his own witnesses on cross-examination or sole issue is construction or interpretation of written documents produced by plaintiff.—Ten Eyck v. Lombard, supra.

(3) Dismissals at end of plaintiff's case are deemed nonsuits for failure of proof only, in most instances, so as to render fact findings by trial court unnecessary.—Ten Eyck v. Lombard, supra.

(4) Dismissal of complaint for failure of proof is not on merits, so that fact findings by court are unnecessary, since merits are involved only where prima facie case is made out and proof offered to rebut it.—Ten Eyck v. Lombard, supra.

(5) Decision by trial court on defendant's motion to dismiss complaint at end of plaintiff's case that "The motion for a nonsuit is granted upon the sole ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action" was merely nonsuit, not decision on merits, so as to require denial of defendant's application for fact findings.—Ten Eyck v. Lombard, supra.

Conclusion of plaintiff's testimony

In action tried by court without jury, a dismissal at conclusion of plaintiff's testimony is a determination on merits and should be accompanied by findings and conclusions.—Roush v. Battin, 30 N.W.2d 453, 252 Wis. 8.

Only recognized conclusions of fact or law

In an action tried by jury, the jury's verdict and the judgment of the court are the only recognized conclusions of fact or law.—Sinclair Refining Co. v. Costin, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 894.

Mistrial

Where an action was commenced before a jury which found on the several questions submitted to them, and their further services in the case were waived by consent of both parties to the action, with further findings of fact being made by the court, it must be assumed there was not a mistrial.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Tracy, 29 N.Y.S. 77, 77 Hun 443, affirmed 44 N.E. 1126, 150 N.Y. 565.

is merely advisory.¹¹ Where written findings of fact are required by statute, it has been held that such a statute has no application to a law case tried to a jury;¹² and the court is not required to make findings where the jury sat in the case until the close of the evidence and were then discharged without the case being submitted to them, where the request for findings was not made until after all the evidence was in and the jury discharged.¹³ In an action at law tried wholly before a jury, the court is not authorized to state conclusions of law and findings of fact¹⁴ where it allows the verdict to stand and refuses to modify or set it aside;¹⁵ but where only part of the issues are submitted to the jury in a law action the court, although it cannot be required to do so, may make separate findings on the issues not submitted to the jury provided there is no conflict with the jury findings.¹⁶ Where part of the issues in an equitable action are submitted to the jury, the court may make findings on the issues not submitted to the jury, as discussed in Equity § 509.

e. Direction of Verdict or Motion Therefor

Generally, findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary where a verdict is directed.

Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary where a verdict is directed.¹⁷ According to some authorities, findings should be made where both parties move for a directed verdict;¹⁸ but other authorities take a view to the contrary.¹⁹

§ 613. Waiver

The statutory right of a party to findings of fact and conclusions of law may be waived by him.

The statutory right of a party to findings of fact and conclusions of law may be waived by him,²⁰ as by entering into a stipulation for the submission of the case on an agreed statement of facts²¹ or for the expression of the decision of the court in a verdict, for the purpose of relieving it of the neces-

Independent findings by court

In suit to have two instruments in the form of deeds reformed to be mortgages, as allegedly intended by the parties, wherein jury found that the instruments were mortgages, trial court did not err in making a number of independent findings, without the request of any of the parties, concerning monetary accounts between the parties, alleged extension of vendor's lien note involved, and plaintiff's tender of all amounts he owed defendants where the contest had been waged over the whole gamut of dealings between the parties.—McAlexander v. Question of law

Trial court having directed a verdict for defendant at the close of plaintiff's evidence in a case being tried to a jury was not required by statute at plaintiff's request to state separately conclusions of fact and of law, since statute providing for such separate statements applies only to cases where questions of fact are tried by the court.—Bauer v. Cleveland Ry. Co., 47 N.E.2d 225, 141 Ohio St. 197.

In New Mexico

(1) Where both parties to action request directed verdicts and make no requests to allow jury to determine fact questions, fact findings and conclusions of law must be made by trial court, unless waived.—Goldenberg v. Village of Capitan, 203 P.2d 370, 53 N.M. 137.

(2) Where only one of the parties to action asks for a directed verdict, which is granted, it has been held that findings of fact and conclusions of law must be made by trial court, unless they are waived.—Goldenberg v. Village of Capitan, 227 P.2d 630, 55 N.M. 122.

(3) However, it has also been held that where only one of parties to action asks for directed verdict, which is granted, fact findings and conclusions of law by trial court are unnecessary.—Goldenberg v. Village of Capitan, 203 P.2d 370, 53 N.M. 137.

Judgment immune from attack

Where an issue of fact is submitted to trial judge for determination and a finding of the issue is waived, a judgment entered without a written finding would be valid and immune from attack.—Petroleum Midway Co. v. Zahn, 145 P.2d 371, 62 Cal.App.2d 645.

sity of making formal findings.²² The failure to object, as required by some statutes, to alleged specific defects in findings made by the court constitutes a waiver of such defects, but such failure to object is not a waiver of the failure of the court to find at all on a material issue.²³ Under a statute which provides the circumstances under which findings may be waived it has been held that the only manner in which findings may be waived are in the statutory manner.²⁴ Under such a statute a finding may be waived by written consent filed with the court,²⁵ or by oral consent in open court and entered in the minutes,²⁶ or by failure to appear²⁷ at the trial. Giving notice of motion for a new trial does not amount to a waiver of findings,²⁸ and where a party duly excepts to a general finding made by the trial court, he does not waive his right to special findings of facts which were properly and timely requested at the beginning of the trial.²⁹ Where an issue of fact is submitted to a trial judge for his determination and a finding of such issue is not waived, the entry of a judgment without a written finding is unauthorized.³⁰

§ 614. Time for Making

Findings of fact by the court should not be made before all the proof has been offered and the parties have rested.

The court should not make findings of fact, either on motion or sua sponte,³¹ before all the proof has been offered³² and defendant has rested his case.³³ Also, the court is without power to make findings after the end of the term during which judgment was rendered,³⁴ or in vacation;³⁵ and it is held that findings unless waived must precede the entry of judgment³⁶ and can be made thereafter only where the judgment is vacated.³⁷ Findings, however, are not required to be made simultaneously with the entry of judgment;³⁸ the trial judge does not lose jurisdiction by delaying both findings and judgment until after the end of the term,³⁹ or the expiration of one term of office and the beginning of a new one.⁴⁰ It has been held that findings may be made at the same term during which the case is

§ 615. Facts and Conclusions to Be Found and Effect of Failure to Find on Particular Questions

- a. Findings of fact
- b. Conclusions of law

a. Findings of Fact

- (1) In general
- (2) Matters in issue or not in issue

(1) In General

Where the judgment is supported by the findings made, no fatal error results from failure of the trial court to find on particular matters which would not affect the judgment rendered or which are not supported by evidence; and it is not necessary to make findings as to facts judicially noticed or implied by law, matters which will be presumed, the law of the case, legal conclusions which have been pleaded, or prior interlocutory orders or proceedings in the same cause.

Where the judgment is supported by the findings made, no fatal error results from the failure of the trial court to find on particular matters which would not change or affect the judgment rendered,⁴⁵ or which would invalidate the judgment if supported by evidence, but which are not so supported.⁴⁶ Likewise, the want of a finding is not fatal unless there was evidence before the court from which it was required to make a finding which would counterveil its other findings.⁴⁷

It is not necessary to make findings as to facts judicially noticed,⁴⁸ facts implied by law,⁴⁹ matters which will be presumed,⁵⁰ a ruling on a former appeal which is the law of the case,⁵¹ legal conclusions which have been pleaded,⁵² or prior interlocutory orders or proceedings in the same cause.⁵³

Statutes or municipal charters. A municipal charter is not to be found as a fact where it has been made a public act to be read in evidence without proof.⁵⁴ Also, findings of fact may properly be silent as to validity or construction of statutes.⁵⁵ The law of a foreign state, however, is a question of fact on which findings should be made.⁵⁶

Repetition. Where the same allegations are contained in two pleadings of defendant and there are complete findings as to one pleading, they need not be repeated as to the other pleading.⁵⁷ Also, it is unnecessary to make specific findings on affirmative allegations in the answer where such allegations follow and merely emphasize the denials in the answer and the answer is sufficient without them.⁵⁸

(2) Matters in Issue or Not in Issue

Where findings of fact are required and not waived it is the duty of the court to make findings on all material issues of fact raised by the pleadings and evidence and in respect of which findings are necessary to support the judgment.

Where findings of fact are required and not waived,⁵⁹ it becomes the duty of the court to make which findings are necessary to support the judgment.⁶⁴ So, generally, the court should find the facts on every issue,⁶⁵ every controverted issue of fact,⁶⁶ or every issue of fact raised by the pleadings.⁶⁷ Also, it has been held or stated in a few cases that the findings must cover all material issues raised by the pleadings regardless of the evidence,⁶⁸ and that the parties are entitled to findings of fact on a matter not alleged but litigated by common consent.⁶⁹

A trial court is required, however, to file only such findings as the record justifies,⁷⁰ and is not required to make findings with respect to every item of evidence introduced in a case;⁷¹ and it is generally deemed unnecessary to make findings on immaterial issues,⁷² issues not determinative, or necessary to a determination, of the case,⁷³ questions which did not arise during the course of the trial,⁷⁴ issues which have been withdrawn,⁷⁵ matters not made issues by the pleadings,⁷⁶ or matters not

Only facts necessary to be found are those in controversy and material to defenses submitted and on which cause is finally ruled, it being unnecessary to make finding as to issues which have become moot.—Painter v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 71 S. W.2d 483, 228 Mo.App. 576.

made issues by the evidence.⁷⁷ Issues or questions which at first appear to be material may be rendered immaterial, so as to require no findings, by a finding or conclusion on another issue or question⁷⁸ which is determinative of the case,⁷⁹ an application of this principle being the lack of necessity of finding on all the defenses, where a finding on one issue necessarily determines the case against plaintiff.⁸⁰

Findings taken as whole. It is not always necessary to make a specific finding as to each of several material issues where the findings taken as a whole, or construed together, clearly show that they include the conclusion of the court on all the material issues.⁸¹

Agreed, admitted, or undenied matters. Except in some jurisdictions,⁸² it is not necessary to make findings as to matters admitted or not denied in the pleadings,⁸³ or otherwise agreed on.⁸⁴ However, an admission of one matter does not dispense with the necessity of a finding as to another matter not covered by the admission;⁸⁵ and a particular admission may not be so clear and definite as to relieve the court of making any finding on the matter to which it relates.⁸⁶

Express, implied, or negative findings. Failure to make an express finding on an issue is not fatal where a finding thereon is necessarily implied from the findings made.⁸⁷ Also, it is not absolutely necessary to make an express finding as to a matter which is necessarily⁸⁸ or reasonably⁸⁹ negated by the findings made. Thus, where the court makes affirmative findings of fact on the material issues in favor of one party and such findings are inconsistent with, and a complete negative of, the truth of the matter set forth in the pleadings of the other party, it need not expressly and specifically find on the matters the truth of which is thus negated.⁹⁰

b. Conclusions of Law

The conclusions of law necessary to be stated are the conclusions which, under the facts found, are required by the law and from which the judgment is to result; and while correct practice requires that conclusions be stated on every issue of fact formed by the pleadings and tried by the court, it is not necessary to state conclusions on every minor question of law which may arise in the case.

§ 616. Requests

In order to be of any avail, a request for a finding must be made by one of the parties, and generally it devolves on the party desiring a certain finding to obtain it. In making such a request a party concedes as a matter of law that the case is a proper one to be decided as one of fact.

§ 617. — Necessity

In some jurisdictions it is the duty of the court in an action tried before it without a jury to make findings and conclusions even when not requested to do so by either party, but in others a request by one of the parties is necessary in order to make it the duty of the court to state findings of fact or specific findings.

In some jurisdictions it is the duty of the court in an action tried before it without a jury to make findings and conclusions even when not requested to do so by either party,⁵ or at least it is its duty to do so in respect of all material issues presented by the pleadings,⁶ although not in respect of items of damages;⁷ but under other statutes or court rules a request by one of the parties is necessary in order to make it the duty of the court to state findings of fact,⁸ or at least to make it the duty of the court to state specific, rather than general, findings⁹ or findings on any one particular issue,

Duty to make findings supported by evidence

Where plaintiff submitted requested findings of fact and conclusions of law after trial court had sustained defendant's motion to dismiss complaint, it was duty of trial court to make any relevant fact finding requested by plaintiff that was supported by substantial evidence, and, in making his decision on any requested finding, he should have taken as true all testimony and reasonable inferences flowing therefrom tending to prove that finding and should have disregarded all conflicts and all evidence tending to weaken or disprove it.—Sandoval County Board of Education v. Function of a request for conclusions is with a view of excepting to the decision of the court on questions of law involved in the trial, primarily to determine whether such conclusions of fact support or warrant the conclusions of law drawn from such facts, and a secondary function is to avoid the necessity of a transcript of the evidence in the record on appeal unless party appealing desires to attack one or more of the findings as unsupported by the evidence.—In re Harmon's Estate, 96 N.E.2d 34, 87 Ohio App. 451.

30. When request may be made under statute

(1) For purposes of statute requiring request for findings to be made at the time of trial, a trial continues until the issues of a case have been adjudicated.—Haupt v. La Brea Heating & Air Conditioning Co., 270 P.2d 125, 125 Cal.App.2d Supp. 888.

(2) The submission of a case for decision does not end trial and findings of fact may be requested until adjudication of the issues.—Hardy v. Foster, 270 P.2d 130, 125 Cal.App.2d Supp. 890—Haupt v. La Brea Heating & Air Conditioning Co., supra.

(3) Where taking of testimony had terminated and case had been submitted for decision, but permission was given counsel to file briefs, defendant's request for supporting findings was timely when made in his first filed brief.—Haupt v. La Brea Heating & Air Conditioning Co., supra.

(4) Request for findings of fact was timely, when made immediately after court announced its oral judgment and before judgment had been entered in clerk's official minutes.—Engleman v. Green, 270 P.2d 127, 125 Cal.App.2d Supp. 882.

(5) Where plaintiff requested findings of fact in letter, which was addressed to trial judge, and which was filed by clerk a week before judgment was entered court erred in failing to file findings of fact as requested.—Hardy v. Foster, supra.

Request made in alternative

In contested civil action tried by the court without a jury, defendant's request that trial judge give in writing his finding of facts and reasons for judgment, made in the alternative in connection with motion for a new trial, was authorized by constitutional provision.—Blinks Mfg. in the record.⁴¹ It is not proper,⁴² necessary,⁴³ or customary⁴⁴ to question or interrogate the court. Requests for conclusions of fact and of law should be separated.⁴⁵ Also, a request must be applicable to, and supported by, the evidence⁴⁶ in the whole and not merely in part.⁴⁷ Requests should not be made which are frivolous⁴⁸ or unnecessarily numerous.⁴⁹ Notwithstanding a request to make findings on a certain issue is not in proper form, the matter may be so important to a right decision that the findings should not leave it in doubt.⁵⁰

Proposed findings. In some jurisdictions a party should not present a proposed finding or attempt to dictate the terms of the finding;⁵¹ but in other jurisdictions the proper practice is for a party or his counsel to submit to the trial judge such findings of fact and conclusions of law as, in his opinion, the evidence and the law justify, and request the judge to make such findings and conclusions.⁵² Proposed findings are merely an aid and assistance to the court in preparing its findings of fact and conclusions of law.⁵³

Statement of claim, purpose, or evidence. Under some statutes or rules of court the court should refuse to make a finding where neither party has filed a statement of what each has offered evidence to prove and claims to have proved;⁵⁴ and it is not required to make a finding on a question which a party, in his request for a finding, has not included in the statement of the claims of law which he desires to raise on appeal.⁵⁵ A statement of the claims of law made at the trial is a necessary part of a finding, and the trial court is justified in refusing to make any finding if a party fails to file a statement of his claims of law as requested by the court.⁵⁶ In other jurisdictions a request need not be accompanied by a statement that it is presented with a view of taking an exception.⁵⁷

Motion. A formal motion is not required in order to make a request;⁵⁸ and a motion, made at the close of the hearing, to introduce further evidence is not a request for a finding;⁵⁹ but a motion to find a verdict for defendant in a case tried without a jury has been held to be a request for findings of fact.⁶⁰

§ 620. — Filing, Record, or Presentation

Under some statutes it is incumbent on a party desiring findings of fact and conclusions of law to call the judge's attention to the request, and according to some authority an entry of the request on the minutes of the court is necessary.

Under some statutes it is incumbent on a party desiring findings of fact and conclusions of law not only to make a request therefor but also to call the judge's attention to the request,⁶¹ the judge not being required to examine the docket or files to ascertain whether a request has been made,⁶² or to take cognizance of a motion or other request not called to his attention.⁶³ However, where the court has entered an order showing a request, the request need not again be called to the attention of the court.⁶⁴ According to some authority an entry of the request on the minutes of the court is necessary.⁶⁵

§ 621. — Ruling

In jurisdictions wherein it is the duty of the court in an action tried before it without a jury to make findings and conclusions without any request therefor, where the court makes adequate findings and conclusions it is under no duty to consider requests, but in other jurisdictions the court should ordinarily respond to requests and grant those which are proper.

Where it is the duty of the court in an action tried before it without a jury to make findings and conclusions without any request therefor, and where the trial judge prepares his own findings of fact and conclusions of law which are fully and adequately responsive to all the issues framed by the pleadings, he is under no duty or obligation whatsoever to consider, respond to, or take action on, requests for findings.⁶⁶ In other jurisdictions where it is the duty of the court in an action tried before it alone to make findings of fact and conclusions of law when properly requested to do so, the court ordinarily should respond to each request⁶⁷ even though a decision might otherwise be reached,⁶⁸ and, when required to do so by statute or rule of court, note in the margin of each request the disposition made thereof.⁶⁹ The trial judge is not bound to accept in their entirety findings and conclusions proposed by a party;⁷⁰ he may do so in toto or in part, or disregard such proposed findings and conclusions in their entirety.⁷¹ It has been said, however, that it is not proper for the trial court to refuse a proposed specific finding of an ultimate fact within the issues supported by substantial evidence, believed by the court, and necessary to determine the issues in the case.⁷² A failure to respond to or categorically answer each specific request is not necessarily or always fatal,⁷³ as where the parties are not prejudiced thereby⁷⁴ or the ruling on the requests otherwise appears of record.⁷⁵

Practice held not objectionable
Trial judge's action in unqualifiedly marking all of plaintiff's requests for findings "affirmed" was not objectionable practice, if court believed them correct, nor was repetition of requests in hac verba as judge's individual findings objectionable, although unnecessary.—Leary v. City of Philadelphia, 172 A. 459, 314 Pa. 458.

Practice resulting in uncertainty disapproved

(1) The practice reflected by statement that court trying case had considered all requests for rulings and findings and that those consistent with rulings and findings made were deemed to have been granted while those inconsistent were deemed to have been denied, is, because of the uncertainty which may result, not to be encouraged.—Lynch v. Grundy, 98 A.2d 160, 98 N.H. 282.

(2) Trial judge's action in marking defendant's requests for findings "refused as drawn," without explanation, was objectionable practice, since not sufficiently informing appellate court as to meaning of such answer to requests.—Leary v. City of Philadelphia, 172 A. 459, 314 Pa. 458.

Erroneous refusal

Filing a decision without including any finding of fact requested by a party constitutes a refusal to make any of the party's requested findings,⁷⁶ even though the court had endorsed "adopted" on some of them.⁷⁷ Requests to find which are not marked are deemed refused if not embodied in the decision.⁷⁸

The court may adopt such requested findings and conclusions as it approves or modifies,⁷⁹ but a party is not entitled to a specific finding of fact or conclusion of law on every point which he may request.⁸⁰ The trial court has a right to prepare its findings in support of its judgment in its own way,⁸¹ and it is not necessary to make a finding in the exact language of a request therefor.⁸² While a request for a finding of fact warranted by the evidence is properly granted,⁸³ it is not necessary to grant an improper request⁸⁴ or make a requested finding or conclusion which would be improper.⁸⁵ Accordingly, proposed findings may be rejected or requests refused for the reason that they are argumentative,⁸⁶ incomplete,⁸⁷ unsound in part,⁸⁸ or too general,⁸⁹ or where they are contradictory to, or inconsistent with, findings or conclusions actually made by the court;⁹⁰ also where they are substan-

Waiver construed

In realty broker's action for commission for procuring customer for realty owned by bank, wherein broker contended that bank's acting treasurer contracted to pay the commission, the trial judge by granting bank's requested finding that on all the evidence the broker could not recover, and that he could not recover on specified counts, did not rule that the evidence did not warrant a finding for the broker on the declaration or on either count, but ruled that the broker had not proved his case.—Howard v. Malden Sav. Bank, supra.

Rejected version of facts

Defendants' requested fact findings, conforming to their version of facts, which trial court refused to accept, tially covered by the findings as made,⁹¹ or contain mere recitations of evidentiary facts as distinguished from ultimate facts,⁹² or are merely conclusions of law which would have been without force if compiled with.⁹³

Likewise, proposed findings may be rejected or requests refused where they are not supported by the evidence,⁹⁴ or are not required as a matter of law on the evidence,⁹⁵ as where the evidence is conflicting⁹⁶ or there is evidence fairly and reasonably tending to show the contrary,⁹⁷ even though a finding as requested might be permissible.⁹⁸ So proposed findings may be rejected or requests refused on the ground that they are immaterial,⁹⁹ but it has been said that where a party requests the finding of certain facts which have been proved, a trial court is seldom justified in omitting them from the finding because it deems them immaterial.¹ A requested conclusion of law is properly rejected if it is without basis of fact,² or is practically a not error, although evidence relied on was not contradicted by testimony of other witnesses, where it contained such elements of weakness on cross-examination and otherwise as to justify court in refusing to hold that it supported requested finding.—Walker v. Smith, 42 P.2d 768, 39 N.M. 148.

point for binding instructions because assuming that a default had been committed.³ A general request that facts be found does not place on the court the duty to find all possible facts.⁴ Where the court made findings amply sufficient to dispose of the case, a contention that it refused to make any findings is obviously without merit,⁵ and where the court in its final order affirmed all requests made by a party, so is a contention that the court failed to make certain findings requested by that party.⁶

Before, at, or after decision. Although the court, after consenting or refusing to give requested findings, is at liberty to change its mind before the decision of the case,⁷ where the court fails to pass on requests at or before the decision, it is not sufficient to do so on the settlement of the case,⁸ or on overruling a motion for a new trial.⁹

Statement of ground of refusal. It has been held that where a request is refused, the ground of refusal must be distinctly stated,¹⁰ unless it plainly appears in some way on the record¹¹ or it is obvious that no harm is done or rights endangered by the refusal.¹²

§ 622. Preparation and Form Generally

Findings of fact and conclusions of law are ordinarily required to be in writing in English and signed by the judge, and while they should be formal, in narrative form, and conform to the practice of the particular jurisdiction, it is not necessary that they be in any particular form, unless a form is prescribed by statute.

Findings of fact and conclusions of law are ordinarily required to be in writing¹³ in the English language¹⁴ and signed by the judge,¹⁵ although oral findings have been held sufficient where there were no disputed facts in the case,¹⁶ or where none of the parties requested written findings or objected to the oral statements which were transcribed and set forth in the abstract.¹⁷ While findings of fact should be formal,¹⁸ in narrative form,¹⁹ and conform to the practice of the particular jurisdiction,²⁰ it is not necessary that they be in any par-

In action to recover damages for deprivation of peaceful possession of leased apartment by defendant landlord's wrongful acts, defendant had right to separate findings by court as to amounts of damages sustained by plaintiff as result of alleged business losses and because of humiliation, inconvenience, and mental distress.—Tooke v. Allen, 192 P.2d 804, 85 Cal.App.2d 230.

ticular form,²¹ unless a form is prescribed by statute.²² The document known as the Findings of Fact should in itself contain all of the findings of the court so that reference to that document alone will inform the parties what the facts are as found by the court, and should not attempt to include facts determined in another document by mere reference thereto.²³

Incorporation in judgment or bill of exceptions. Statutes relating to findings of fact and conclusions of law may be substantially complied with by incorporating findings and conclusions in the judgment or decree,²⁴ although proper procedure may dictate that statutory findings should be made and filed entirely separate from the judgment itself.²⁵

trial⁴¹ or on rendering judgment.⁴² The rulings of the court at the trial do not constitute the conclusions of law contemplated by statute.⁴³ However, it has been held that the denial of defendant's motion for judgment on the ground of laches amounts to a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of laches;⁴⁴ and where the court did not make formal findings of fact, but its posttrial comments indicated clearly the impression made on its mind, its summary of the evidence has been held, in effect, to constitute findings of fact.⁴⁵ A statement which is obviously a finding of fact will be treated as such although inaptly described as a memorandum.⁴⁶

Opinion. An opinion,⁴⁷ whether oral⁴⁸ or written,⁴⁹ is not a finding; and the general adoption of recitals in an opinion as and for findings of fact is unsatisfactory,⁵⁰ even if legally sufficient;⁵¹ but statements of fact in an opinion may be treated as equivalent to a finding of facts,⁵² as where the unsuccessful party or his counsel so regards them and does not except to the method pursued by the trial court.⁵³

Decision. It has been held that neither an oral⁵⁴ nor written⁵⁵ decision is a finding of fact within the meaning of statutes. However, facts stated in a memorandum made a part of the decision of the court which are not inconsistent with the facts specifically found have been held to become a part of the findings,⁵⁶ but before matter contained in the memorandum can be considered as a finding of fact, it must be a proper subject for a finding of fact.⁵⁷ Under a statute requiring the court to make a decision consisting of findings of facts and conclusions of law in a single document signed and filed in the cause as a part of the record proper, findings and conclusions requested by the parties and adopted by the court should be made a part of the decision of the court, and should be incorporated in the decision,⁵⁸ and not adopted merely by reference.⁵⁹

§ 623. — Preparation by or for Court

In some jurisdictions it is the function of the judge, while in others it is the function of the court, to make findings; and in some jurisdictions it has become customary to have the prevailing party submit proposed findings and conclusions which the court may or may not adopt after examination.

In some jurisdictions it is the function of the judge,⁶⁰ while in others it is the function of the court,⁶¹ to make findings. In the former jurisdictions the findings may be made up by the judge in a county other than the one in which the trial was had;⁶² but in the latter jurisdictions the findings may be made only in open court⁶³ and not at chambers⁶⁴ or the home of the judge.⁶⁵ Under a statute requiring findings prepared by the court to be served on, or mailed to, the parties a specified time before the filing thereof, failure to follow the statutory procedure deprives the parties of rights which the law accords them.⁶⁶

It has become customary in some jurisdictions to have the prevailing party submit proposed findings and conclusions.⁶⁷ Counsel who prepare findings for the trial court should do so in such a way as to enable the court to make such findings independent of any references to the pleadings or exhibits.⁶⁸ Where findings are prepared by the attorney of the successful party, it has been held that the court should not sign them before they have been submitted to, or a copy served on, the adverse party;⁶⁹ but such submission or service is not necessary in the absence of a mandatory statute, in force at the time, requiring it.⁷⁰ Although by rule of court the adverse party may submit objections and proposed amendments to proposed findings and conclusions prepared by the prevailing party and the court may set a time for hearing the objections and proposed amendments, it is not error, in the absence of a mandatory requirement of the rule, to fail to give parties an opportunity to be heard.⁷¹

The court is not bound to adopt findings and conclusions prepared at its direction,⁷² but may make its findings and conclusions independent of either such proposed findings and conclusions or objections and amendments offered thereto.⁷³ On the other hand, except in some jurisdictions,⁷⁴ it may adopt, after examination, findings prepared, at its direction, by the successful party or his attorney,⁷⁵ or those prepared by a referee⁷⁶ or another judge;⁷⁷ and when findings of fact and conclusions

Where the effect of the written judgment is that when taken in the light most favorable to plaintiff all the evidence is insufficient to support a favorable finding for him on any issue raised by the pleadings, there is a sufficient compliance with the statute even though the court makes no specific findings of fact.—Home Real Es-

the facts found lead to but one conclusion, the conclusions of law need not be separated therefrom.⁹⁷ The duty may not be performed by a successor judge.⁹⁸

b. Form and Requisites

In order to comply with a statute requiring findings of fact and conclusions of law to be stated separately, it is necessary and sufficient so to separate the material and controlling facts and conclusions as to render them distinguishable; and the fact that the separation is not made with technical accuracy in every instance is not necessarily fatal.

In order to comply with a statute requiring findings of fact and conclusions of law to be stated separately, it is necessary and sufficient so to separate the material and controlling facts and conclusions as to render them distinguishable.⁹⁹ All that is required is that the material and controlling facts and rulings of law be so separated and distinguished from each other as to afford the party an opportunity to except to any particular findings of law or fact, thereby enabling him to assign and point out such finding as error.¹ The important requirement is that sufficient, ultimate facts be stated legally to support the conclusions of law reached.² Literal compliance with the statutory requirement is not necessary;³ and the fact that the separation is not made with technical accuracy in every instance is not necessarily fatal.⁴ The findings and conclusions need not be under separate covers;⁵ and the putting of the conclusions of fact and law on the same page does not render them irregular, where they are separately stated and paragraphed.⁶ Separation of findings and conclusions without separately designating them is sufficient.⁷

Intermixture. While matters of fact and matters of law should not be mixed or compounded,⁸ an occasional intermixture or compounding does not

§ 625. Sufficiency Generally

The sufficiency of the findings of fact to support the judgment rendered is the test commonly resorted to in determining their sufficiency, and the findings cannot be aided by the conclusions of law, but a particular finding may be disregarded where there are other findings sufficient to sustain the conclusions and judgment, or where it is immaterial or does not affect the legal rights of the parties, or is discredited by its own terms.

Counsel, as representatives of litigants and officers of the court, are entitled, after trial without a jury, to findings of fact fully responsive to their sincere contentions;¹⁴ but a judge trying a case without a jury cannot make a finding of fact which a jury, if it were hearing the case, would not be permitted to make.¹⁵ The sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment rendered is the test commonly resorted to in determining their sufficiency.¹⁶

The findings need not state a legal deduction drawn from the facts found, such a deduction being properly included in the conclusions of law.¹⁷ Furthermore, the findings cannot be aided by the conclusions of law,¹⁸ and a judgment cannot stand when it is based on purported findings of fact which are in effect mere legal conclusions.¹⁹ However, a particular finding may be disregarded where there are other findings sufficient to sustain or support the conclusions²⁰ and judgment,²¹ as well as where it is immaterial,²² has no bearing on the conclusions of law,²³ does not affect the legal rights of the parties,²⁴ or is discredited or nullified by its own terms.²⁵

Incompleteness is a fatal objection to findings.²⁶

Findings made in alternative
(1) Judgment will not be reversed as unsupported by findings, if findings are made in alternative, not inconsistent with each other, and either alternative standing alone will support judgment.—Perkes v. Utah Idaho Milk Co., 39 P.2d 308, 85 Utah 217.

(2) In action for price of milk sold to defendant, findings that persons to whom milk was delivered were defendant's agents, and, if not defendant's agents, that plaintiff dealt with them believing they were his agents, supported judgment for plaintiff.—Perkes v. Utah Idaho Milk Co., supra.

(3) In action for loss of whiskey stored, finding in warehouseman's favor that loss occurred through theft or leakage was not inadequate on theory that specification of theft cancelled the specification of leakage and left the situation unexplained.—Rubinstein v. Washington Cold Storage Co., 138 P.2d 852, 18 Wash.2d 238.

Sufficiency determined by substance rather than form

Whether findings of fact contained sufficient findings to support judgment, must be determined by their substance and the legitimate inferences that might be drawn therefrom rather than by their form.—Cortella v. Salt Lake City, 72 P.2d 630, 93 Utah 236.

Fulfillment of purpose of statute

Where fact findings actually made, including the converse of a refused finding on a vital issue, sufficiently support the judgment rendered and afford unsuccessful party a record adequate for review, purpose of statute requiring trial court to make fact findings has been fulfilled.—Hartzell v. Jackson, 73 P.2d 820, 41 N.M. 700.

Fact that special finding contains conclusions of law or conclusions of fact or evidentiary facts is immaterial. If there exists sufficient ultimate facts to justify the conclusions.—Lyon v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 44 N.E.2d 186, 112 Ind.App. 573.

Surplusage

Statement of simple, obvious fact

In action for alienation of affections of plaintiff's wife, trial judge's finding that attorney representing wife sat with defendant's counsel and conferred with them was not improper as making judge a witness to material fact, without giving defendant opportunity to cross-examination, but was statement of simple, obvious fact.—*Armstrong v. If possible, the facts should be found and stated so fully that either litigant can have the case adequately reviewed on appeal without bringing up the evidence.²⁷ Where, however, the findings necessarily decide all facts in dispute, the findings are sufficient.²⁸

Presumptions. It has been said that all presumptions and intendments are in favor of, rather than against, a finding of facts.²⁹ However, the rule of evidence that a thing proved to exist is presumed to continue to exist, discussed in Evidence § 124, is not applicable to a finding of the existence of a fact prior to the commencement of the action.³⁰

The findings by the trial court should be complete in themselves without reference to proposed findings of counsel.—Shaw v. Shaw, 208 P.2d 514, 122 Mont. 593.

§ 626. — Definiteness and Certainty

Findings should be clear and certain, but extreme accuracy of statement or minuteness of detail is not required, and findings are sufficient if the truth or falsity of each material allegation not admitted can be demonstrated therefrom, or if they can be made certain by reference to the pleadings or record.

The essentials of findings of fact are that they should be clear,³¹ concise,³² intelligible,³³ definite,³⁴ certain,³⁵ unequivocal,³⁶ direct,³⁷ positive,³⁸ and conclusive,³⁹ and not be vague⁴⁰ or evasive.⁴¹ The same precision and particularity are required as in a special verdict.⁴² Although it has been held that findings should be tested by the same rules as pleadings,⁴³ the precision and particularity necessary in a special pleading are not necessary in a finding.⁴⁴

but there is also authority to the contrary.⁴⁵ While findings should be prepared with great care and accuracy in order to establish the true factual basis for the decision of the court,⁴⁶ extreme accuracy of statement is not required,⁴⁷ and neither is minuteness of detail.⁴⁸ Findings are sufficient if the truth or falsity of each material allegation not admitted can be demonstrated therefrom,⁴⁹ or if they can be made certain by reference to the pleadings⁵⁰ or the record.⁵¹ Even though a finding might have been more clearly phrased, it is sufficient if its language is clear enough to indicate what the court intended.⁵²

The findings should leave nothing to be found by implication.⁵³ As discussed infra § 634, however, it is no objection to a finding that it is based on presumption or inference; and findings which do not expressly state the required facts are often held to state the legal equivalent thereof.⁵⁴

Two or more matters in general. There should be distinct findings on every material issue made by the pleadings.⁵⁵ Each issuable fact should be made the subject of a separate finding.⁵⁶ However, repetition should be avoided.⁵⁷ Separate findings on each of two items of damage alleged have been held not required where defendant made no request for segregation of such items.⁵⁸

Where there are several causes of action the court should make a separate finding on each matter which is applicable only to one cause of action⁵⁹ and it should make only one finding as to each matter which is common or applicable to all causes of action.⁶⁰ It has been held that separate charges or causes of action need not be made the subject of distinct findings.⁶¹

Several counts require only one set of findings;⁶² and where a single cause of action is made the subject of two or more counts for the purpose of meeting different phases of proof, a single finding on all of the counts is sufficient;⁶³ but where there are two contradictory counts the facts found must, in order to warrant a recovery, sustain one count

Certainty, definiteness, and particularity in pleading generally see Pleading § 40.

Negative pregnant

(1) The sufficiency of findings turns on the particular case, and there is no absolute rule that findings are insufficient because they are phrased as negatives pregnant.—Johndrow v. Thomas, 187 P.2d 681, 31 Cal.2d 202.

(2) The logical defect of a negative pregnant does not apply to findings of trial court.—Ballagh v. Williams, 122 P.2d 343, 50 Cal.App.2d 10.—McAuliffe v. McAuliffe, 199 P. 1071, 53 Cal.App. 352.

(3) Finding "that it is not true, as alleged," that plaintiff conducted himself "at all times" on day of assault in a proper manner, was not subject to criticism that it was in the form of a negative pregnant, and that therefore the finding did not support judgment for defendant, where remainder of finding was that plaintiff conducted himself in a threatening and belligerent manner.—Luisi v. Coviello, 132 P.2d 531, 56 Cal.App.2d 467.

(4) Finding that it was not true that defendants had any knowledge of plaintiff's purpose in purchasing property and made any representation inducing plaintiffs to purchase property was in nature of a negative pregnant, implying truth of affirmative allegations in complaint, and was insufficient to support a judgment.—*Williamson v. Where actions or proceedings are consolidated, all the facts in issue may be embodied in a single set of findings.⁶⁶

Two or more plaintiffs or defendants. The court cannot be required to make separate findings of fact as to each separate plaintiff or defendant or group of plaintiffs or defendants.⁶⁷ However, a finding evidently intended to refer to less than the whole number of plaintiffs⁶⁸ or defendants,⁶⁹ but not designating which one or ones, is uncertain.

§ 627. — General or Specific Findings

A general finding may be sufficient to support a judgment or decree, but under some circumstances a general finding is insufficient and special findings are necessary; and specific findings are always to be preferred to general findings.

A general finding may be sufficient⁷⁰ to support a judgment or decree,⁷¹ especially where the judgment or decree is one of nonsuit or for defendant.⁷² Such a finding need not show the facts supporting it.⁷³ On the other hand, a general finding is insufficient and special findings are necessary where they are required by statute on request and a proper and timely request is made,⁷⁴ judgment is rendered for defendant on his claim for affirmative relief,⁷⁵ or damages are awarded a party who has pleaded special and particularized damages.⁷⁶ Under a statute which gives the parties the right to request either special or general findings, but does not expressly require the judge to enter special findings, the trial court is invested with discretion to make general findings even though special findings are requested,⁷⁷ and, as has been stated supra § 610, in a few jurisdictions the court may, in its discretion, make special findings but cannot be compelled to do so. Specific findings are always to be preferred to general findings.⁷⁸ A proper and sufficient special finding involves a specific statement of the facts on which the rights of the parties are to be determined.⁷⁹ The findings must be sufficiently specific to enable an appellate court to review the decision⁸⁰ and test the correctness of the judgment.⁸¹ However, a finding need not be

General:

Conclusion of law see infra § 631.
Finding as to truth of allegations see infra § 630.

Splitting issues

In action by county surveyor against county to recover per diem compensation under statute for services rendered, trial court, which elected to make special findings under statute, was required to find on all material issues raised by complaint and answer, but it was not required to split up those issues by making separate findings as to particular days on which either work or service was performed, or to make a finding as to what was done as work and what as service.—Howard v. Klamath County, 215 P. 2d 362, 188 Or. 205.

Negative allegations

If general findings necessarily negative allegations of defendants' answer as to which specific findings were not made, the findings are sufficient.—Cleverdon v. more specific than the pleading raising the issue to which it relates;⁸² and where a finding is sufficient to refute the affirmative allegations of a pleading, more specific findings with relation thereto are not required.⁸³

Special findings treated as general finding. It has been held that alleged special findings will be treated as a general finding if they are not signed by the judge⁸⁴ or are not followed by conclusions of law;⁸⁵ and in a least one jurisdiction wherein special findings are not authorized unless requested, special findings made without request will, as shown supra § 617, be treated as a general finding.

General and special findings in same case. Although frequently done, the making of both general and special findings in the same case is irregular.⁸⁶ When the general finding is first made, it is not superseded by the later special finding;⁸⁷ and error cannot be predicated on the insufficiency of special findings, unnecessarily made in addition to the general finding,⁸⁸ since such special findings may be treated as surplusage.⁸⁹ Sometimes, however, where both general and special findings are made, the general finding is disregarded.⁹⁰ In other instances the general finding is deemed to include any fact necessary to support the judgment not in conflict with the special findings.⁹¹ Also, what appears to be a general finding is sometimes regarded, not as an independent general finding, but as a mere preface to a special finding.⁹²

§ 628. — Extrinsic Facts and Papers

Ordinarily, findings of fact cannot be aided by extrinsic facts or papers, but they may be aided by public records or matters appearing of record in the case.

Ordinarily, findings of fact cannot be aided by extrinsic facts or papers.⁹³ They may, however, be aided by deeds, maps, or other public records,⁹⁴ as well as by matters appearing of record in the case,⁹⁵ and, as discussed infra § 630, the findings may, in some jurisdictions, refer to the pleadings or exhibits or documents given in evidence.

§ 629. — Ultimate or Evidentiary Facts

It is necessary and sufficient for the findings to state the ultimate facts found by the court, and a statement or setting out of evidence or of probative, evidentiary, or subordinate facts is neither necessary nor proper unless the evidentiary fact and the inferential fact are identical.

- What are "ultimate" and "evidentiary" facts
- (1) "There are only two kinds of facts, which are ultimate facts and evidentiary facts. The first is necessary and essential for any determination or decision by the court. The second contains the facts necessary to prove the essential or ultimate facts."—*People ex rel. Hudson & M. R. Co. v. - (2) "Ultimate facts are the final facts required to establish the plaintiff's cause of action or the defendant's defenses. . . . Ultimate facts are those found in that vaguely defined area lying between evidential facts on the one side and conclusions of law on the other. . . . An ultimate fact is the final result of effect which is reached by processes of logical reasoning from the evidentiary facts. . . . Whether a statement is an ultimate fact or a conclusion of law, depends upon whether it is reached by natural reasoning or by an application of fixed rules of law."—Woodard v. Mordecai, 67 S.E.2d 639, 644, 645, 234 N.C. 463.
- (3) The rule which requires findings of fact requires only that ultimate facts be found, and it does not exclude conclusions of facts but only conclusions of law.—Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v. Construction Products Corp., 241 P.2d 1054, 110 Cal. App.2d 1.
- (4) If, from the facts in evidence, the result can be reached by that process of natural reasoning adopted in the investigation of truth, it becomes an ultimate fact, to be found as such, but if resort must be had to the artificial processes of law, in order to reach a final determination, the result is a conclusion of law.—Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v. Construction Products Corp., supra.
- (5) "Findings of fact" mean "ultimate facts" which are conclusions of fact or deductions to be made from one or more basic or evidentiary facts to arrive at the final facts although the stepping stone facts in between may require the application of legal propositions to resolve them, and what should be contained in the findings of facts are those facts on each issue which are necessary to make flow from them a law conclusion or to make such law conclusions intelligible.—Sandall v. Hoskins, 137 P.2d 819, 104 Utah 50.
- (6) Trial court in making findings must conclude from basic competent testimony certain facts which, although necessarily conclusions or inferences derived from "sense facts," which are facts derived from testimony of witnesses based on observation or use of senses of such witnesses, are not objectionable merely because they are conclusions.—In re Hanson's Estate, 52 P.2d 1103, 87 Utah 580.

legally determined⁹⁸ and on which the judgment is to rest.⁹⁹ As discussed infra § 649, a finding of ultimate facts necessarily includes all the probative facts, together with the inferences, deduc-

Ruling on effect of facts

Trial judge cannot be compelled to give ruling on effect of a single disconnected fact, and this rule cannot be avoided by multiplying requests until they cover all several material facts involved in decision of case.—Liggett Drug Co. v. § 630. — Reference to Pleadings, Evidence, or Other Matters

It is generally held permissible for the findings to refer to the pleadings or evidence for a specification of the facts found or not found.

Although there is some authority holding otherwise,⁸ and although the practice is not to be commended,⁹ it is generally held permissible for the findings to refer to the pleadings for a specification of the facts found or not found,¹⁰ as by stating generally that all the allegations contained in the complaint or answer are true or untrue, as the case may be,¹¹ provided the reference is distinct, certain,

Conformity of findings with pleadings generally see infra § 633.

"Omnibus findings"

General findings such as that the allegations of the defendant's answer are false are characterized as "omnibus findings" but are sufficient.—In re Scherer's Estate, 136 P.2d 103, 58 Cal.App.2d 133.

Finding as incorporating allegations of pleading

Finding that allegations contained in designated paragraphs of plaintiff's complaint were true, by reference to such paragraphs, incorporated allegations contained therein to same extent as though court had specifically set forth allegations in detail, and finding was sufficient without setting forth such allegations in detail.—Clevedon v. Gray, 145 P.2d 95, 62 Cal.App.2d 612.

Allegations not expressly found to be true

A finding that all allegations of a paragraph of a complaint or answer not expressly found to be true are untrue is sufficient.—Cirlincione v. Cirlincione, 230 P.2d 642, 104 Cal.App.2d 35.

Negative pregnant

Contention of plaintiff that finding of trial court that all allegations contained in certain paragraphs of com-

and intelligible,¹² the facts are sufficiently stated in the pleadings,¹³ and, if the reference is to the complaint, provided it states a cause of action¹⁴ and the answer consists of denials only and presents no affirmative defenses.¹⁵

Evidence. In making up its findings, it is competent for the court, in some jurisdictions, merely to refer to exhibits or documents given in evidence.¹⁶ Other authority holds, however, that findings cannot be limited or supplemented by reference to exhibits.¹⁷ A finding which is uncertain in its reference to the evidence is insufficient,¹⁸ as is also a finding that the facts are contained in the bill of evidence¹⁹ or that the evidence does not show that plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for.²⁰ Incorporation of an exhibit into the finding by reference sufficiently makes the existence of the exhibit a fact found by the trial court, but does not mean that the truth of any statement which may be contained in the exhibit is established; if the court intends to find a specific fact contained in an exhibit, it should include it among the facts found or by reference to the exhibit state that the facts recited therein are found.²¹

Opinion. It is improper practice for the trial court in its formal findings of fact to refer to its written opinion and make it a part of the findings to the extent that it passes on the facts.²²

Answers of jury to interrogatories on which a special finding by the court is based may be incorporated into the finding by reference.²³

§ 631. — Conclusions of Law

The conclusions of law must be based on, and sustained by, the findings of fact, but should not themselves find matters of fact. General conclusions are ordinarily sufficient.

The conclusions of law must be based on, and sustained by, the findings of fact,²⁴ but should not plaint were not true, was in the form of a negative pregnant was hypercritical, as giving to a finding that "all are not true" the meaning "not all are true."—Fereria v. Nunn, 220 P.2d 20, 98 Cal.App.2d 367—Baillagh v. Williams, 122 P.2d 343, 50 Cal.App.2d 10.

son v. Boyd, 28 N.E.2d 256, 217 Ind. 348.

(5) Conclusions "that the law is with the cross-complainant" and against the insurance company, and that "the law is with the cross-complainant" and against plaintiff.—Bill v. Boettcher, 85 N.E.2d 495, 116 Ind. App. 631, rehearing denied 66 N.E.2d 131, 116 Ind.App. 631.

Conclusion criticised

Compromise of controversy

In action on contract, court was without authority to make finding in compromise of controversy by disregarding allegations and proof submitted by parties on principal issues presented.—Horst v. Staley, 54 P.2d 376, 101 Mont. 543.

Application of general finding. Where there are several counts and some are bad or are not supported by the evidence, but there is one good count which is supported by the evidence, a general finding will be referred and applied to that count.³⁵

not necessary that they closely⁴¹ follow the pleadings⁴² or the language thereof,⁴³ provided they are so drawn that the truth or falsity of every material allegation can be demonstrated therefrom.⁴⁴

Finding for plaintiff must be responsive to the theory⁴⁵ or allegations⁴⁶ of the petition or complaint; but it need not be responsive to all the allegations, provided findings on part of them are sufficient to sustain the judgment.⁴⁷ Moreover, the trial court is not bound to follow the allegations of the complaint where the findings are properly based on allegations of the answer of cross defendants;⁴⁸ and an immaterial variance between the findings and the complaint is not fatal.⁴⁹ Where an action is tried on an amended complaint, an objection that a general finding that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true refers to the original complaint is hypercritical.⁵⁰ A complaint will not be deemed amended to conform with a finding of a court.⁵¹

Defective or insufficient pleading. A finding will not be sustained by a bad paragraph of a complaint,⁵² or a plea which has been eliminated by the sustaining of a demurrer or exception thereto.⁵³ On the other hand, where the pleadings are indefinite, and the adverse party fails to move to make them definite and certain, the court may find facts which the pleadings on any fair construction will authorize.⁵⁴

b. Issues

The findings when compared with the pleadings must be within the issues and be responsive thereto, and must cover the material issues raised by the pleadings. It is improper to make findings without the scope of the issues made by the pleadings, and where such findings are made they are nugatory and must be disregarded or treated as immaterial.

not, 264 P.2d 826, 122 Cal.App.2d 116—French v. Smith Booth Usher Co., 131 P.2d 863, 56 Cal.App.2d 23—Gordon v. Santa Cruz Portland Cement Co., App., 130 P.2d 232—Kenfield v. Welp, 60 P.2d 885, 16 Cal.App.2d 501—Hudson v. Becker, 56 P.2d 249, 12 Cal.App.2d 743.

Negation of allegation

(1) Generally, a finding which is in the identical language a negation of the allegation in complaint is sufficient.

Cal.—Turner v. Turner, 203 P. 109, 187 Cal. 632.

Nev.—Edmonds v. Perry, 140 P.2d 568, 62 Nev. 41.

(2) However, findings following the conjunctive form attempting to negate allegations of answer charging asserted negligence of plaintiff and averring that each of specified acts was done negligently and carelessly are inadequate and imply the truth of the affirmative allegations in the pleading.—Mardesch v. C. J. Hendry Co., 125 P.2d 595, 51 Cal.App.2d 567.

(3) Nevertheless, a finding that it is not true, as alleged, that without provocation or justification, warning or right defendant committed an assault on plaintiff striking him in the eye and face and kicked him in the chest and body, was not subject to the criticism that findings, being in the conjunctive rather than in the disjunctive, implied that defendant assaulted plaintiff without provocation or justification by striking plaintiff either in the eye or face and kicking him in the chest or body, where all findings considered as a whole expressly repelled such implications.—

When issues arise

In determining whether a trial court has made findings on all material issues, issues arise on the pleadings when a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by one party and controverted by other, and issue of fact arises on a material allegation in complaint controverted by answer.—Howard v. Attempt by finding to correct defect of pleading

In action for money had and received, where plaintiff alleged that deceased collected rent from property belonging to plaintiff, the fact that finding that deceased did not collect rentals belonging to plaintiff, attempted to correct a defect by finding with reference to a substantial right, not alleged, did not render the finding objectionable.—Edmonds v. § 634. — Evidence

It is essential to the sufficiency of findings that they be sustained by the evidence, but the findings need not be premised on direct evidence, and even slender evidence may be the basis of a finding of fact when it appears that there is no more evidence to be had.

It is essential to the sufficiency of findings of fact that they be sustained by the evidence,⁶⁷ rather than by mere conjecture, surmise, or suspicion,⁶⁸

Improper consideration of matters not in evidence

(1) In deciding case, court should not consider a scientific or technical work, treatise, or table not admitted in evidence.—Gaines v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., La.App., 32 So.2d 633.

(2) Insurance companies' tables, showing distances required to bring vehicles to stop under certain speeds and particular circumstances, should not have been considered by district judge in determining question of negligence of driver of truck striking motorbike at street intersection, where such tables were not offered in evidence with proof of their accuracy.—Gaines v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., La.App., 32 So.2d 633.

Fact trier's rejection of evidence does not authorize findings without evidentiary support or assumption of facts in conflict with discredited evidence.—Zwiercan v. International Shoe Co., 176 A. 286, 87 N.H. 196.

Evidence not conclusively establishing fact

When a case involving determination of a question of fact is tried before trial court without a jury, if any one fact material to a recovery by plaintiff is supported by some evidence, but not conclusively established in plaintiff's favor, trial court may render judgment for defendant, or fail to render judgment for plaintiff.—Evans v. Dr. Pepper Bottling Co., Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 706.

Exact accordance with evidence

Court was not bound to find value of items omitted in building house in exact accord with defendant's evidence.—Zajonc v. Szrpekowski, 141 A. 651, 107 Conn. 532.

Testamentary purpose

A so-called finding that spendthrift trust was for maintenance and support of beneficiaries was not required to be supported by evidence since it was no more than statement of purpose of testator as court understood it from will.—In re De Lano's Estate, 145 P.2d 672, 62 Cal.App.2d 368.

the results of independent investigation, observation, or experiments by the trial judge,⁶⁹ or the statements of counsel;⁷⁰ and where a finding is not sustained by sufficient evidence, it will not support the judgment.⁷¹ The findings need not be premised on direct evidence;⁷² they may be supported by circumstantial evidence⁷³ or any substantial evidence,⁷⁴ or reasonable inferences supported by the evidence;⁷⁵ and even slender evidence may be the basis of a finding of fact when it appears that there is no more evidence to be had.⁷⁶ An affidavit which the court declared to constitute a pleading, and which was not admitted in evidence for that reason, cannot be considered evidence supporting a finding.⁷⁷ Papers before the court, but not formally introduced in evidence, such as exhibits attached to a pleading and consisting of certified copies of the pleadings and proceedings in another suit, are necessarily considered by the court as a basis for its findings of fact in passing on a plea of res judicata.⁷⁸

Absence or failure of proof. While the failure to prove a fact or the absence of evidence concerning it should not be made the basis of a positive and affirmative finding as to that fact,⁷⁹ the court may, in its discretion, state that no evidence has been offered with respect to a particular point or feature, where such is the case,⁸⁰ and where the absence or insufficiency of evidence is in respect of a material issue, the finding on that issue may and should be against the party having the burden of proof.⁸¹

Inadmissible or excluded evidence. Ordinarily, a finding may not properly be based on inadmissible evidence,⁸² or on excluded evidence;⁸³ and evidence which was offered and received for a limited purpose cannot be made the basis of a finding of fact unconnected with such purpose.⁸⁴

§ 635. — Agreed, Admitted, or Undenied Matters

The court is justified in finding facts as they are alleged and admitted or not denied in the pleadings, and may also base findings on admissions of counsel, but findings which are contrary to, or inconsistent with, admitted or agreed facts are unauthorized and cannot stand.

The court is justified in finding facts as they are alleged and admitted or not denied in the pleadings,⁸⁵ and may also base findings on admissions of counsel.⁸⁶ Findings which are contrary to, or inconsistent with, admitted or agreed facts are un-

A judgment will not ordinarily be supported by findings of fact which are antagonistic, inconsistent, or contradictory as to material matters, or by conclusions of law which are at variance with the findings of fact or which are inconsistent with each other; but the courts endeavor to reconcile findings which appear to be contradictory so as to uphold the judgment if possible.

Amendment of findings inconsistent with facts admitted see infra § 638. Appellant entitled to benefit of finding most favorable to him in case of inconsistency see Appeal and Error § 1485 b.

Consistency of findings on: Equity hearing see Equity § 493. Trial by jury see supra §§ 562-564. Inconsistent findings as ground for new trial see New Trial § 56. Reversal of judgment generally see Appeal and Error § 1893.

A judgment will not be supported by findings of fact which are antagonistic, inconsistent, or contradictory as to material matters,⁹⁴ unless the evidence is such that the judgment can be said to be clearly right regardless of the findings.⁹⁵ Likewise, a judgment will not be supported by conclusions of law which are at variance with the findings of fact⁹⁶ or which are inconsistent with each other,⁹⁷ unless the judgment is in accordance with the correct conclusion of law from the facts found.⁹⁸ However, the courts endeavor to reconcile findings which appear to be contradictory,⁹⁹ so as to uphold the judgment if possible,¹ and in order to do so will construe the findings as a whole² and liberally in favor of the judgment;³ but the rule cannot be used to uphold findings that are inconsistent with each other.⁴ Where there is ample evidence to support a recovery on either of two inconsistent theories, and the trial court makes findings on both, the findings on the theory inconsistent with that on which the judgment was based may be disregarded as surplusage,⁵ but where the evidence fails to support the finding on the theory relied on there can be no recovery on the finding on the inconsistent theory.⁶ Since the trial judge has the right to change his mind at any time prior to the actual entry of findings, it is immaterial that findings made in a memorandum decision are directly contradictory to the oral findings previously made at the trial.⁷ Findings of fact will prevail over conclusions of law inconsistent therewith,⁸ since erroneous conclusions are ineffectual to destroy the fact findings from which the conclusions were drawn.⁹

Sufficiency of findings to support judgment generally see Judgments § 55.

"Negative pregnant"

With respect to alleged inconsistency of findings, a "negative pregnant," in fact finding is such form of negative expression as may imply or carry with it an affirmative.—Jordan v. Jordan, 135 P.2d 416, 58 Cal. App.2d 371.

General and special findings. General and special findings will be construed if possible so as to sustain the judgment,¹⁰ but unless the general finding is first made, in which event it is not superseded by a later special finding, special findings will control the general finding in the event of inconsistency.¹¹ Where two special findings are in con-

dict, the one supporting the general finding will control.¹²

Ultimate and probative facts. With respect to inconsistency between the finding of an ultimate fact and findings of probative facts, the finding as to the ultimate fact will ordinarily control.¹³ The findings of probative facts can be used, however, to overcome an express finding of the ultimate fact,¹⁴ as where it clearly appears that the ultimate fact is found only as a conclusion from the particular probative facts found,¹⁵ or the probative facts found are such as necessarily to overcome the finding of the ultimate fact,¹⁶ or the primary facts stated lead to but one conclusion,¹⁷ or it appears that the finding of probative facts disposes of all the facts involved in the pleadings and that the facts found constitute all the facts in the case.¹⁸ Where the findings of probative facts are susceptible of a construction which will support the judgment, they do not adversely affect the findings of ultimate facts.¹⁹

Findings by jury on special issues. Where special issues are submitted to a jury, the findings of the jury are subordinate to, and controlled by, the findings of the court, in case of conflict.²⁰

§ 637. Defects and Errors

Defects and errors in findings or conclusions are not fatal unless prejudicial; and in the absence of prejudice, findings and conclusions may be sufficient despite slight and inadvertent errors therein.

Defects and errors in findings or conclusions are not fatal unless prejudicial,²¹ as where no relief is based thereon,²² or, as sometimes stated, where the corrected findings would necessarily be against appellant;²³ and a party in whose favor findings are made will not be heard to complain of their insufficiency.²⁴ Thus, in the absence of prejudice, findings and conclusions may be sufficient despite slight and inadvertent errors therein,²⁵ such as clerical errors,²⁶ recitals of an erroneous date,²⁷ or mere mistakes in form.²⁸

§ 638. Amendment or Correction

- a. In general
- b. Grounds

a. In General

As a general rule a trial court has power to amend or correct its findings of fact and conclusions of law.

As a general rule, a trial court, at the proper time, has authority to change, modify, or correct its findings of fact and conclusions of law,²⁹ including special findings of fact and conclusions of law;³⁰ and under some rules of procedure it is the mandatory duty of the trial court to file amended findings where a party complies with the procedure prescribed for obtaining them.³¹ The trial court may amend and correct its findings so as to make them conform to the decision actually made,³² or to the facts as stipulated by the parties,³³ although amendments should be limited to questions litigated at the trial.³⁴ Where no findings of fact were made there can be no amendment thereof.³⁵

There is authority holding that, after making and entry of record of its finding, the court has no power to set aside such finding and without a new trial make another finding on the evidence that had been adduced and enter judgment thereon.³⁶ In a jurisdiction in which matters other than the material facts on which the judgment is based have no place in a special finding and can be presented only by a finding made for the purpose of an appeal, it has been held improper to seek to have a special finding take the place of a finding made for the purpose of appeal.³⁷

Findings supplementary to jury findings. The making of findings supplementary to those of the jury has been held not error,³⁸ and is in any event not ground for complaint by the party requesting such supplementary findings.³⁹

Proposed findings are subject to change⁴⁰ and may be followed by proposed amendments thereto.⁴¹

Effect of denial of motion. The denial of a motion to alter and amend findings is equivalent to a finding negating the facts requested to be found

Amendment of jury verdict to include findings by court see supra § 517.

Objections and exceptions see infra §§ 652-657.

Power of federal courts to amend findings see Federal Courts § 140.

Alteration held not shown

Ruling of trial judge that plaintiff could not recover on quantum meruit unless he acted in good faith or substantially performed contract did not alter the judge's definite and conclusive finding that unsigned agreement was not adopted as oral contract between the parties.—Oman v. Vickery, 62 N.E.2d 112, 318 Mass. 780.

Re-entering finding

Where a trial judge has made findings of fact before discovering a mis-laid request for a ruling of law, he can adopt the procedure of revoking his original finding and entering the same finding again at the time of his ruling on the mislaid request.—Society of Jesus of New England v. Josepfson, 29 N.E.2d 554, 307 Mass. 608.

Findings of court

Findings in final form when judgment is rendered are findings of court, regardless of whether they were changed.—Louisa Coleman Che Mah Dunn v. Starke County Trust & Savings Bank, 184 N.E. 424, 98 Ind.App. 86, followed in Coleman Che Mah Dunn v. Smith, 184 N.E. 426, 98 Ind.App. 698.

Merits of controversy

Court has power to correct errors in its fact findings, even as to merits, at any time before judgment, where it has been imposed on.—N. E. Redlon Co. v. Franklin Square Corp., 23 A.2d 370, 91 N.H. 502.

Inadvertent notations

The court has power to correct inadvertent notations it made on proposed findings submitted so as to conform them to its original intention and determination as well as its action on a different set of findings.—People v. Foote, 273 N.Y.S. 567, 242 App.Div. 162, motion denied 5 N.E.2d 362, 272 N.Y. 622, appeal dismissed 7 N.E.2d 728, 273 N.Y. 629 and 7 N.E.2d 729, 273 N.Y. 630, certiorari denied Foote v. in such motion,⁴² and after denial of the motion it may not successfully be claimed that the court failed to pass on the issues of fact involved therein.⁴³ The rule, however, is inapplicable where both parties move for a specific finding on an issue, opposite in effect, and both motions are denied, since the application of the rule under such circumstances would leave inconsistent findings.⁴⁴

By successor or other judge. It has been held that findings may be corrected by the successor of the judge originally making them,⁴⁵ or by a judge other than the one who tried the cause;⁴⁶ but there is other authority which holds that a trial judge's right to modify, change, or set aside his findings and conclusions resides only in him and is not transferable to his successor in office or any contemporaneous judge of the same court.⁴⁷

Effect of amendment. Amended findings control as to any previous conflicting findings, regardless of whether or not the previous findings have been superseded.⁴⁸

Notice of proposed amendment. Findings of fact may not be changed in a material manner without notice,⁴⁹ although before judgment the court may change its conclusions of law without notice to the parties litigant.⁵⁰

b. Grounds

In general, the trial court may amend or correct findings of fact and conclusions of law on the ground that they are defective, incomplete, outside the issues, or not supported by the evidence; and it may properly refuse to amend or correct findings and conclusions supported by the evidence or which are proper and sufficient, or to make amendments or corrections not supported by the evidence, or which are immaterial or outside the issues, or which would make the findings inconsistent.

In general, the amendment or correction of findings of fact and conclusions of law by the trial court rests in its sound discretion.⁵¹ Hence, while the trial court may properly amend or correct its findings of fact and conclusions of law where the evidence is sufficient to support the amendment made,⁵² and should amend them as far as necessary to make them conform to the facts admitted,⁵³ provided the nonconformity is material,⁵⁴ or where they fail to follow the evidence and do not speak the truth to the detriment of the party complaining,⁵⁵ generally speaking, it is required to amend or strike them only when they are not supported

Entirely new set of findings

Where the trial court filed an entirely new set of findings covering the whole case, which were complete in themselves and inconsistent with findings previously filed, trial judge would be regarded as having intended that amended findings should supersede original findings and should control in disposition of the case.—Waters v. by the evidence⁶⁶ or are outside the issues litigated.⁶⁷

Findings of fact and conclusions of law may be amended or corrected on the ground that they are defective or incomplete,⁶⁸ unresponsive to the issues,⁶⁹ inconsistent,⁶⁰ or contain a clerical error.⁶¹ Also they may be stricken on the ground that they are inconsistent or ambiguous and unnecessary,⁶² irrelevant⁶³ or immaterial⁶⁴ to the issues, or relate to issues which were eliminated by the statements of counsel on both sides;⁶⁵ and findings should be stricken where they relate to matters concerning which the court had stated that it would not rule,⁶⁶ or which, because they were entered during vacation, are void and at least constructively fraudulent as to plaintiff, as where they cut off his statutory right to dismiss his cause of action before the court announced its finding, caused his motion for a new trial to come too late, and cut off his right of appeal from an adverse ruling on that motion.⁶⁷

On the other hand, the court may properly refuse to amend or strike immaterial findings,⁶⁸ or findings supported by the evidence,⁶⁹ even though they are conflicting;⁷⁰ and it may properly refuse amendment or correction where the decisive findings of fact are sustained by the evidence and support the conclusions of law,⁷¹ where the findings and conclusions already announced are proper and sufficient,⁷² or where the findings fairly present all facts for the proper presentation of every question which complainant could urge on appeal.⁷³

The court may refuse a requested amendment or correction which appears in substance in another finding,⁷⁴ which relates to an immaterial matter⁷⁵ or to a matter not within the issues raised at the trial,⁷⁶ which is not supported by the evidence⁷⁷ or record,⁷⁸ which is supported only by conflicting evidence⁷⁹ or is predicated on the mere statement

Applicability of statute

Where action on trial was by consent limited to question of applicability of a single subdivision of a statute, and court made findings pursuant to such limitation, defeated party could not resort to another and additional subdivision of statute by motion for amended findings.—American Sur. that the witnesses testified in accordance with the request,⁸⁰ which embodies matters merely evidential,⁸¹ which is in direct contradiction of the former contention of the party seeking it,⁸² or which would make the findings at variance with the decision of the court⁸³ or would completely destroy the decision on the merits.⁸⁴ Original conclusions which are consistent with the findings should not be amended or changed so as to be contrary to the original findings where the findings are not changed.⁸⁵

§ 639. — Time of Amendment

- a. In general
- b. After judgment
- c. During or after term

a. In General

As a general rule a trial court may amend, correct, modify, or otherwise change its findings of fact and conclusions of law before entry of judgment or decree.

Generally speaking, a trial court may amend, correct, modify, or otherwise change its findings and conclusions before entry of judgment or decree.⁸⁷

as in the case of additional findings, which may be made during the term and before entry of final judgment, as discussed infra § 643. Under the practice in some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the trial court has power to modify or amend its findings until the signing thereof,⁸⁸ and that the trial justice cannot review or change his conclusions of law and fact after the docket entry thereof has been made.⁸⁹ It has also been held that the power of the trial judge to amend or change the findings exists until the judge has made a formal decision or finding which has been entered in the minutes and docket of the court,⁹⁰ but once the decision becomes a formal one and is formally entered in the records of the court, the judge may not thereafter amend or change the findings.⁹¹ Under some rules of procedure the trial court is required to file amended findings within a specified time after a party has made timely and proper request therefor.⁹²

Within time for motion for new trial. There is authority holding that the court may amend findings and conclusions on or while a motion for new trial is pending,⁹³ or after judgment and on motion for new trial,⁹⁴ and that it may do so without

Change in judgment to be entered

Where findings are filed which constitute the rendition of a judgment, the court retains power to change the conclusions of law so as to point to a different judgment, and to enter a judgment different from that first announced, and such power continues until the entry of the judgment.—Mather v. Mather, 140 P.2d 808, 22 Cal.2d 713—Brownell v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 109 P. 91, 157 Cal. 703.

Complete authority

granting a new trial,⁹⁵ or reopening the case for additional testimony.⁹⁶ Also, it has been held that the trial court may amend its findings and conclusions at any time during which a motion for a new trial may rightfully be filed,⁹⁷ but not thereafter,⁹⁸ or after the expiration of the period within which a trial court can act on a motion for a new trial.⁹⁹

After expiration of time for filing findings. Where the time for filing findings has expired, as discussed infra § 645, it has been held too late for the court to amend its findings by supplying omissions.¹

Where case appealed. It has been held under the local practice in some jurisdictions that the court may amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law at any time before the cause is removed from the court by appeal,² and in others, that they may be amended at any time before argument of the appeal.³

b. After Judgment

Subject to statute or rule of court providing otherwise, a trial court, as a general rule, may not substantially amend, correct, modify, or otherwise change its findings after entry of judgment or decree, but it may correct clerical errors or inadvertent mistakes therein.

Subject to statute or rule of court providing otherwise,⁴ a trial court, as a general rule, may not substantially amend, correct, modify, or otherwise change its findings after entry of judgment or decree,⁵ as by adding, as discussed infra § 643, striking,⁶ or substituting⁷ findings, and the only remedy is by motion for new trial⁸ or by appeal.⁹

The power of the trial court to remedy clerical errors in its findings is inherent and is not abrogated or suspended by the pendency of an appeal or lost through lapse of time.¹⁰ Even after judgment, the trial court may correct a clerical error¹¹ or inadvertent mistake,¹² or supply an omission,¹³ or make such amendments in the findings as are not inconsistent with, and do not affect the validity of, any findings or conclusions on which the judgment rests,¹⁴ or correct purported findings to make them conform to the real findings made.¹⁵ Merely calling an error clerical, however, will not give the court power to correct a judicial error after judgment;¹⁶ and a judicial error is not subject to correction after judgment,¹⁷ even though it was made inadvertent-ly.¹⁸ In an action for an accounting, an amend-ment, after judgment and on motion for new trial, of the findings listing the specific items of the ac-count has been held not prejudicial.¹⁹

After interlocutory judgment. Findings or con-clusions made at the time of the entry of an inter-locutory judgment are subject to change or modifica-tion at the time of entry of the final judgment.²⁰

c. During or after Term

Subject to the rules with respect to amendments after judgment and in the absence of a statute or rule of court providing otherwise, the trial court generally may amend, modify, set aside, or otherwise change its findings at any time during the term at which they were rendered, but not, except as to clerical errors or omissions, at a sub-sequent term.

Subject to the rules with respect to amendment after judgment, as discussed supra subdivision b of this section, and in the absence of a statute or rule of court providing otherwise, the trial court may amend, modify, set aside, or otherwise change its findings at any time during the term at which they were rendered.²¹ The power of a court to change its findings at a subsequent term has been denied,²² although, where an amendment relates merely to correction of obvious mistakes or omis-sions, the court may amend findings and conclusions after expiration of the term.²³

In vacation. After adjournment of the term and in vacation the court may not revise or alter its findings,²⁴ and statutes authorizing entry of a judgment in vacation, discussed in Judgments § 114, do not authorize the court to change its findings in vacation.²⁵

§ 640. — Method of Seeking Amendment or Correction

Either party may request the amendment and cor-rection of findings by the court, but in so doing the method, if any, prescribed by statute should be followed.

The amendment and correction of findings by the court may be made at the suggestion of either party.²⁶ Where the method of seeking amendment or correction of findings is prescribed by statute, such method is ordinarily deemed exclusive.²⁷ Under some rules of procedure a request for amended find-ings should be in writing,²⁸ it should be presented to the trial court within a specified number of days after the original findings and conclusions have been filed,²⁹ and it should specify the amended findings which the party making the request desires the trial court to make and file.³⁰ The method of attempting to correct a finding by substituting the draft find-ing for a major part of the finding as made has been disapproved.³¹

On motion to vacate judgment and substitute a different judgment because of an incorrect or er-roneous conclusion of law not supported by the findings of fact, the court may not change its find-ings of fact.³²

b. Time for Making

Motions for the amendment and correction of findings must be timely and are properly denied where made too late.

An application for amendment of findings is properly denied where made too late.³⁸ Subject to statute or rule of court providing otherwise,³⁹ after entry of judgment a motion will not lie to amend or change findings of fact,⁴⁰ complainant's remedy at that time being by motion for a new trial,⁴¹ or for an order relieving him of any default in submitting a request for findings and conclusions of law;⁴² and a motion to amend findings after judgment is not authorized by statutes permitting motions to vacate judgments⁴³ or by statutes authorizing motions to substitute a judgment that should have been given as matter of law on the findings made where the judgment already given is an incorrect conclusion from such findings.⁴⁴

c. Hearing

On a motion or other application to amend or correct findings, the court may consider the correction requested as a whole and any satisfactory evidence thereon.

On a motion or other application to amend or correct findings, the court may consider the correction requested as a whole,⁴⁵ and may consider any satisfactory evidence.⁴⁶ The court is not required to act singly on each of the proposed changes or modifications,⁴⁷ or to state any reason for its ruling thereon.⁴⁸ The court may decline to adopt any proposed change or modification of the findings by simply denying the motion therefor.⁴⁹

§ 643. Additional Findings

- a. In general
- b. Request
- c. When granted or refused

a. In General

In a proper case the trial court has power to make further or additional findings.

In general the trial court has power to supplement its findings with further or additional findings,⁵¹ so that they truly express that which was actually passed on and decided;⁵² and in a proper case, where there is compliance with the procedure prescribed by rule, it has been held to be the mandatory duty of the trial court to make and file additional findings.⁵³ Additional findings, at least those of a substantial nature, must be made within the time allowed therefor by statute or rule, and may not be made subsequent thereto.⁵⁴ Ordinarily they may be made during the term and before entry of final judgment,⁵⁵ but under the varying statutes or rules of court they cannot be made after judgment,⁵⁶ or after the term,⁵⁷ or a specified time after adjournment of the court,⁵⁸ except to add matter in amplification or explanation of the findings already made.⁵⁹ However, it has been held that the court has power to rule on proposed findings of fact and conclusions after the entry of judgment, provided such rulings are not inconsistent with, or do not affect the validity of, findings of fact and conclusions of law on which the judgment rests;⁶⁰ and it has also been held that after judgment it may supply omissions in the findings,⁶¹ or make findings on additional points not touched on in the findings already made, where the additional findings merely state facts disclosed by the record and do not change the original judgment or the original findings.⁶² Under some statutes the trial court, in ruling on a motion for new trial, may add to the findings in a proper case,⁶³ but it cannot do so after the expiration of the period within which a trial court can act on a motion for a new trial.⁶⁴

A party who desires additional findings of fact or conclusions of law should make a proper request therefor.

Where the findings of fact and conclusions of law do not pass on all the material issues or are otherwise incomplete, an aggrieved party should request additional findings or conclusions.⁶⁵ However, no request is necessary as to additional findings on points on which the court has previously declined to pass,⁶⁶ and, where the court has failed to find on material issues, a party is entitled, on request, to additional findings embracing such issues despite his failure to raise the question before the findings were filed.⁶⁷ Additional findings of fact and conclusions of law may be obtained in the form of interrogatories and the judge's answers thereto where the trial judge consents to such practice and there is no statute to the contrary;⁶⁸ however, it has been held not error to overrule a request for additional findings of fact where the request is in the form of questions practically constituting a cross-examination of the court on findings that have been made.⁶⁹ No effort should ever be made to add to a finding any facts which are inconsistent with those found without also seeking to strike the latter.⁷⁰ Under some statutes or rules of procedure a request for further or additional findings should be in writing,⁷¹ it should be presented to the trial court within a specified number of days after the original findings and conclusions have been filed,⁷² and should specify the further additional findings desired.⁷³

Motion or application. In various jurisdictions the remedy of a party objecting to incompleteness is by motion to the trial court for additional findings,⁷⁴ although in a jurisdiction where under the local practice the proper remedy is by motion for new trial, as discussed in New Trial § 64 a, it has been held that motions for additional findings are not authorized,⁷⁵ and that it is not error for the court to overrule a motion to add to findings.⁷⁶

Hearing of motion. If it defers actual decision thereon until after hearing, the court may properly reduce its tentative conclusion to writing before it has heard the parties on a motion for additional findings.⁷⁷

c. When Granted or Refused

The court may make additional findings where there is evidence to support them, they are material to the case, and equivalent findings have not already been made.

The court may make additional findings where there is evidence to support such action.⁷⁸ It has been held improper to refuse to make specific additional findings requested where, or only where, the court has failed to find on a material issue, and where additional findings requested thereon are sustained by undisputed evidence,⁷⁹ or by such a preponderance of evidence that a finding to the contrary would not be sustained.⁸⁰ Although the party requesting additional findings cannot compel the trial court to find in a particular way, where particular findings are requested, the trial court should respond to the request by finding as it may deem the record to justify.⁸¹

The court may refuse additional findings of fact and conclusions of law where those already made are proper and adequate, cover the material issues of the case, and fully protect the rights of the parties;⁸² where those made are sustained by the evidence and are sufficient to support the conclusions of law;⁸³ where the additional findings and conclusions are equivalent to those already made,⁸⁴ or are sufficiently included in the findings made;⁸⁵ where the facts as to which a finding is requested sufficiently appear of record;⁸⁶ where the additional findings requested are evidentiary in character⁸⁷ and would not change the conclusions of law;⁸⁸ where the requested additional findings are imma-

the material facts were included and the findings made justify the conclusion reached.—Dyer v. Starluth, 78 P.2d 900, 147 Kan. 767.

(3) Where findings of fact showed amount of compensation to which testamentary trustees were entitled for services performed, refusal to relate in findings all services performed by trustees was not error.—Achenbach v. Baker, 118 P.2d 584, 154 Kan. 252.

terial,⁸⁹ or inapplicable to the facts in the case;⁹⁰ where there is no evidence in support of the additional finding,⁹¹ or it is supported only by conflicting evidence,⁹² or the evidence is not conclusive in favor of the proposed finding;⁹³ where the additional findings are in conflict, or inconsistent, with evidentially supported findings already made;⁹⁴ where the additional findings requested constitute merely a statement of a party's theory of the case at variance with the findings of the court;⁹⁵ where the granting of additional findings rests in the discretion of the trial court and no abuse thereof is shown;⁹⁶ where the requested additional finding is made without any reason given for its late filing and the draft finding accompanying it consists of allegations taken from the printed record in the original case or are immaterial;⁹⁷ or where no prejudicial error results from refusal of additional findings.⁹⁸ Additional findings which go beyond the issues made by the pleadings should not be made.⁹⁹

Where a motion to make additional findings is made the court is not required to act singly on each of the proposed additions,¹ or to state any reason for its ruling thereon.² It may decline to adopt any proposed additional finding by simply denying the motion therefor,³ and it has been held that the trial court is justified in failing to reply to a request for additional findings, where it had previously considered and refused a request for the very same findings.⁴

Effect of denial of motion. The denial of a motion for an additional finding has been held equivalent to a finding in favor of the other party on the issue.⁵

Form and sufficiency of additional findings. Additional findings will be construed in connection with the original findings and are not required to be complete and sufficient in themselves.⁶

§ 644. Venire de Novo

The remedy of venire de novo, although generally applicable only to jury trials, in some jurisdictions is also employed to reach defects in form in findings by the court.

Although technically the remedy of venire de novo is appropriate only to jury trials, there is such a close similarity between verdicts by the jury and findings by the court that the courts in at least one jurisdiction have employed the term in designating the remedy available when the findings of a court are defective in form.⁷ The motion reaches defects apparent on the face of the record,⁸ and is available and properly granted where findings are so indefinite, uncertain, and ambiguous that they cannot sustain the judgment.⁹ It has been said, however, that this is the sole instance in which the remedy may be invoked,¹⁰ and that in case of a special finding of facts it will not be awarded unless the finding is defective in form.¹¹

Where conclusions of law impossible

Where special findings of facts are so incomplete and improper in form and so replete with evidentiary matters that no conclusions of law either way could rightfully be drawn therefrom, venire de novo is the proper remedy.—Lesh v. Trustees of Purdue University, Ind.App., 116 N.E.2d 117.

11. Ind.—La Follette v. Higgins, 28 N.E. 768, 129 Ind. 412—Mitchell v.

The motion should not be granted unless the finding is so defective or uncertain on its face as to be incapable of supporting any conclusion of law or of forming the basis of any judgment on the issue involved.¹² In other words the motion is properly overruled where the findings are sufficiently definite and certain to support the judgment.¹³ The motion has been held unavailable where the ground of objection was that the finding embraced more than was necessary,¹⁴ as where evidentiary matter was included,¹⁵ or that the conclusions of law were not sustained by the facts found¹⁶ or were otherwise improper,¹⁷ or that a special finding was unsigned.¹⁸

Failure to find on material issues. A venire de novo may not be awarded on the ground that special findings do not cover all the material issues in the case¹⁹ or all the material facts involved in any of the issues,²⁰ or that they fail to find an ultimate fact essential to a decision;²¹ but the failure to find on all material issues is ground therefor where it occurs with respect to a general finding.²²

Uncertainty in an unnecessary finding is not ground for venire de novo where the findings on material matters are sufficiently certain.²³

Distinguished from motion for new trial. A motion for a venire de novo is distinguished from a motion for a new trial in that the motion for new trial lies when the defect is not apparent from the face of the record, and the motion for venire de novo lies only when the defect is so apparent.²⁴

Time for motion. A motion for a venire de novo may properly be made at any time before final judgment on the finding.²⁵

Construction of findings on motion. In determining the sufficiency of findings on a motion for a venire de novo, they should be construed as a whole.²⁶

In case tried by the superior court without the intervention of a jury, the court is required to briefly note its conclusions of law and fact on its docket.—Everett J. Horton & Co. v. Grinnell, 199 A. 815, 60 R.I. 457.

in order to become effective,²⁹ and are a part of the record.³⁰

What constitutes filing. Leaving findings and conclusions with the clerk for filing in itself constitutes a filing thereof.³¹ Sending findings and conclusions to counsel for one of the parties, however, is not a filing thereof.³²

Notice of filing. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, notice of filing need not be given counsel on either side.³³

Lost findings. Under a statute empowering the court to authorize a copy of a lost paper to be filed and used instead of the original, a court order substituting new findings and conclusions in place of original findings and conclusions which previously had been filed and had become lost is proper.³⁴

b. Demand or Request for Filing

A party who has made timely demand or request therefor is entitled to have findings of fact and conclusions of law filed, and to have them filed in time.

On seasonable demand or request any party has the right to have findings and conclusions filed,³⁵ and to have them filed in time.³⁶ Failure of the trial court to file its findings in time after seasonable request is improper,³⁷ although where the request is not timely it is not error to deny it;³⁸ and in the absence of prejudice the fact that findings and conclusions were filed too late will not invalidate the judgment.³⁹ A party may not complain of the trial judge's failure timely to make and file his findings of fact and conclusions of law where he did not make timely request therefor,⁴⁰ or where the delay in filing is chargeable to him.⁴¹

c. Time for Filing

Findings of fact and conclusions of law should be filed within the time prescribed by statute or rule of court.

In general, findings of fact and conclusions of law should be filed within the time prescribed by statute or rule of court.⁴² Under the various statutes the findings must be filed within a designated period

Effect of filing findings after expiration of judge's term of office see Judges § 47.

In Texas

(1) Under Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 297, the judge of a district or county court, on demand therefor, is required to file his findings of fact and conclusions of law thirty days before the time for filing transcript in the cause.—Bostwick v. Bucklin, Civ.App., 190 S.W.2d 814, motion denied 190 S.W.2d 818, two cases, 144 Tex. 375.—Dean Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Tom W. Grace Co., Civ. App., 151 S.W.2d 321.

(2) The trial court commits no error in failing to file fact findings within term of court at which judgment was rendered.—Watts v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., Civ.App., 140 S.W.2d 604.

(3) Prior to the adoption of the rule there were various decisions construing the statutes with respect to the time of filing.—In re Supplies' Estate, Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 13.—Hewitt v. Green, Civ.App., 28 S.W.2d 892.—Gulf Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. Newton, Civ.App., 27 S.W.2d 873—

after submission of the case,⁴³ at or before entry of judgment,⁴⁴ before the judgment becomes final,⁴⁵ or during the term.⁴⁶ Some provisions with respect to the time of filing have been held mandatory,⁴⁷ and findings of fact and conclusions of law which were not filed by the trial court within the time prescribed are of no avail and cannot be considered;⁴⁸ but other provisions are construed as merely directory,⁴⁹ and a mere delay in filing is not fatal when not prejudicial.⁵⁰ Where the statute is directory, the failure to file within the statutory period neither makes the case subject to a motion for reopening,⁵¹ nor deprives the court of jurisdiction to file its findings and conclusions after expiration of the statutory period.⁵² Where they are filed subsequent to the entry of judgment it has been held that the filing should ordinarily be with the consent of opposing counsel or made nunc pro tunc on order of the court after notice to opposing counsel.⁵³

It has been held sufficient, in the absence of statute or rule of court as to the time when they must be filed, that findings or conclusions are filed within a reasonable time before the time fixed by law for the filing of the transcript of the record in an appellate court,⁵⁴ and that it is not necessary that they be filed within the time for the making of a motion for new trial.⁵⁵

Agreement of parties. The time for filing the findings may be extended by consent of the parties,⁵⁶ but the fact that the parties agree that the time for signing the bill of exceptions shall be extended does not extend the time for the judge to file his findings of fact.⁵⁷ On the other hand, under a mandatory statute as to the time for filing findings of fact and conclusions of law, an agreement of the parties is ineffectual to extend the time for filing.⁵⁸

Proof of time of filing. While merely leaving findings with the clerk may constitute a filing thereof, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the date of the clerk's indorsement, rather than the date of the findings, controls as to the time of filing in the absence of other evidence.⁵⁹

d. Nunc Pro Tunc Filing and Entry

In some jurisdictions the trial court, in a proper case, may file findings of fact and conclusions of law nunc pro tunc, but in others such practice is not permitted.

Under the statutes and practice in some jurisdictions findings of fact and conclusions of law may not be filed nunc pro tunc.⁶⁰ In other jurisdictions, however, the trial court has authority, in a proper case, to order findings of fact and conclusions of law filed nunc pro tunc,⁶¹ subject to the condition that the rights of a party are not jeopardized thereby.⁶² It may order them filed nunc pro tunc as of such date as will preserve them,⁶³ and as far as it is necessary to protect the rights of the parties the court may order them filed nunc pro tunc as of a day anterior to the death of a party.⁶⁴ Thus, it has been held that the court has authority to order findings filed nunc pro tunc as of the date of submission of the cause, where a party dies after its submission but before its decision,⁶⁵ and that where a party dies after trial but before actual submission of the cause, the court may order findings filed nunc pro tunc as of a date prior to the death of the party, but that findings covering supplemental proceedings after the death of the party must be considered as of their actual date.⁶⁶ Where findings are filed nunc pro tunc before appeal is taken, failure to file them sooner does not render the judgment void.⁶⁷

Entry. Where findings and conclusions have been duly made and filed, but not entered in the minutes or journal, it is proper after judgment to order the findings entered nunc pro tunc as of the proper date.⁶⁸

§ 646. Construction and Operation

Findings and conclusions of the trial court are to be reasonably construed as a whole, so as to uphold, rather than to defeat, the judgment.

Findings and conclusions of the trial court should be given a reasonable construction⁶⁹ in accordance with the intention of the trial court.⁷⁰ Particular words and phrases employed in the findings or conclusions of a trial court will be given their ordinary meaning in the absence of anything to show that they were used in a different sense.⁷¹ The words

61. Utah.—Openshaw v. Young, 152 P.2d 84, 107 Utah 399.

Filing subsequent to entry of judgment

Idaho.—Roberts v. Roberts, 201 P.2d 91, 68 Idaho 535.

Same as judgment

The court has the same authority to order findings of fact and conclusions of law to be filed nunc pro tunc as it has to order the judgment thereon to be so entered.—Norton v. City of Pomona, 53 P.2d 952, 5 Cal.2d 54.—Kalliterna v. Wright, 212 P.2d 32, 94 Cal.App.2d 926.

Misplaced findings

Where findings of fact and conclusions of law had been misplaced through no fault of the litigants, filing of them nunc pro tunc as of the time they were actually made was proper and judgment was not void or voidable merely because judgment roll showed that the findings of fact and conclusions of law were actually filed after the judgment.—Fisher v. Losey, 177 P.2d 384, 78 Cal.App.2d 121.

62. Utah.—Openshaw v. Young, 152 P.2d 84, 107 Utah 399.

Rights of appeal

Utah.—Openshaw v. Young, supra.

63. Cal.—Norton v. City of Pomona, 53 P.2d 952, 5 Cal.2d 54.

Date of signing

Where findings of fact were actually signed before judgment but were not on file at time of signing and filing judgment, trial court properly ordered findings filed nunc pro tunc as of date of their signing.—Kalliterna v. Wright, 212 P.2d 32, 94 Cal.App.2d 926.

64. Cal.—Norton v. City of Pomona, 53 P.2d 952, 5 Cal.2d 54.

Authorization as to judgment

A statute providing for entry of judgment after death of a party on a verdict or decision before death, does not do away with the rule which authorizes the court to direct that its decision shall be entered nunc pro tunc as of a day anterior to the death of a party.—Norton v. City of Pomona, supra.

Date opinion filed

Where the trial court, before defendant's death, rendered its opinion ordering judgment for plaintiff, it had the right, after defendant's death, to order the findings filed nunc pro tunc as of the date of the opinion.—Copp v. Rives, 217 P. 818, 62 Cal.App. 778.

Awkward phrase

Findings which comport with rationality must prevail over an obviously awkward phrase which from the context of the findings, as well as the subject matter of the action, cannot be true, and would lead, if given effect, to an absurd result.—Nisbet v. Rhinehart, 42 P.2d 71, 2 Cal.2d 477.

Clear and explicit findings are not subject to construction,⁷⁴ and cannot be explained by other parts of the record.⁷⁵ Where not so clear as to bar construction, findings and conclusions should be interpreted in the light of the pleadings⁷⁶ and proof,⁷⁷ together with such inferences of fact as the trial court might properly draw therefrom,⁷⁸ and in the light of oral⁷⁹ or memorandum⁸⁰ decisions. As an

In case of doubt or ambiguity, findings or conclusions will be construed to uphold, rather than to defeat, the judgment;⁸⁵ they are subject to a fav-

orable⁸⁶ and liberal⁸⁷ construction in support of the judgment, although this rule cannot be used to uphold findings that are unsupported.⁸⁸ The rule that findings are to be construed liberally so as to support the judgment cannot be expanded to the point of rewriting them.⁸⁹ Findings are not to be construed with the strictness of special pleadings.⁹⁰

Construction as whole. Findings or conclusions are to be construed as a whole,⁹¹ for example, in the ascertainment of their meaning,⁹² effect,⁹³ and sufficiency.⁹⁴ Certain language may not be isolated from the entire context, where to do so would place an interpretation on such finding different from that which would follow from a reading of the finding as a whole.⁹⁵ Words inadvertently used may be disregarded where construction of the findings as a whole reveals the inadvertent use of the words and the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment aside from such inadvertent and disregarded words.⁹⁶

A conclusion of law is distinguished from a finding of fact in that it is arrived at through the application of a rule of law and not as a result of a process of natural reasoning.

A conclusion of law may be distinguished from a finding of fact in that it is arrived at through the application of a rule of law and not as a result of a process of natural reasoning.⁹⁷ The line of demarcation between findings of fact and conclusions of law is not easily drawn in all cases,⁹⁸ and whether a particular statement is a conclusion of law or finding of fact, or mixture of the two, may depend on the circumstances involved,⁹⁹ such as averments of a complaint,¹ other findings,² the intention of the trial court as shown by an examination of the issues and evidence,³ and the whole record.⁴ Declarations or statements by the trial judge as to right of recovery,⁵ and as to the state of the proof,⁶ are ordinarily regarded as conclusions of law, although a general finding for one party may constitute a finding of ultimate facts,⁷ and failure of the trial judge to credit particular testimony has been held not a ruling of law but a finding of fact.⁸ An ultimate finding based on special findings of fact may be a conclusion of law.⁹ Where the evidence is undisputed, the findings of the court

amount to conclusions of law.¹⁰ A finding that the statute of limitations has not run is a mixed finding of fact and law.¹¹ Under particular court rules, it has been held that there is no distinction between "findings of fact and conclusions of law" and "specific findings of fact and conclusions of law."¹²

Construction to support judgment. If there is doubt as to whether particular statements should be construed as findings of fact or conclusions of law, the doubt will be resolved in favor of the judgment;¹³ but this rule will not be carried so far as to permit rejection of specific facts found by the court and acceptance of mere conclusions of law in direct conflict therewith in order to sustain the judgment.¹⁴

Effect of characterization by trial court. Although the characterization given it by the court is a factor for consideration,¹⁵ fundamentally the character of a statement as one of fact or law is to be determined by its contents.¹⁶ Findings of fact retain their character as such although they may be inaccurately designated as conclusions or rulings of law,¹⁷ and conclusions of law do not lose their character as such because erroneously listed or described as findings of fact.¹⁸ Findings or conclusions properly stated and classified are not affected by the improper inclusion or classification therewith of other findings or conclusions,¹⁹ and embodying a conclusion of law among findings of fact neither adds to,²⁰ nor detracts from,²¹ the force and effect of the true fact findings. A finding that the allegations of fact in a complaint are true is not a finding that any conclusions of law therein are true,²² although it is a finding of fact.²³ Conclusions stated in the course of a general opinion of the court may not be treated as statutory findings of fact.²⁴ A finding of the trial court stated among the subordinate facts is prima facie a finding of a primary fact and not a conclusion.²⁵ The reason for a decision is not a finding of fact although included with such findings.²⁶

Various findings, under the circumstances of

§ 648. — Ultimate or Probative Facts

Generally, the distinction between findings of ultimate facts and findings of probative facts is that findings of probative facts relate to evidence of the existence of some other fact, and those of ultimate facts to the final resulting effect reached by logical reasoning from the evidentiary facts.

While it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between findings of ultimate facts and findings of evidential facts,³⁴ and whether a particular finding is one of ultimate or probative facts will depend on the circumstances involved,³⁵ generally speaking the distinction is that the findings of evidentiary facts relate to evidence of the existence of some other fact, and those of ultimate facts to the final resulting effect reached by logical reasoning from the evidentiary facts.³⁶ Mere evidentiary facts have no bearing on the conclusions of law stated on a finding of facts.³⁷ The general rule of construction in support of the judgment, discussed supra § 646, applies to construction of findings of ultimate facts.³⁸ An ultimate fact, fairly and reasonably inferable from facts and circumstances proved, is to be taken as established.³⁹

§ 649. — Implied and Negative Findings

A finding of fact or conclusion of law will have the effect of a decision or determination of any matter or issue necessarily involved and settled by the finding made.

Findings and conclusions include not only that which is expressly stated, but also matters of necessary implication from the language used,⁴⁰ as where a fact not expressly found is inferred from express findings by reason of business custom,⁴¹ legal presumption,⁴² or mathematical computation.⁴³ In other words, a finding or conclusion will have the legal effect of a decision or determination of any matter or issue necessarily involved and settled by the finding made,⁴⁴ and this rule has been applied, among other instances,⁴⁵ to findings as to such matters as champerty,⁴⁶ compensation,⁴⁷ consideration,⁴⁸ delivery,⁴⁹ demand,⁵⁰ existence of a contract,⁵¹ fraud or undue influence,⁵² laches,⁵³ last clear chance,⁵⁴ making of a loan,⁵⁵ misrepresentation,⁵⁶ mistake,⁵⁷ modification of contract,⁵⁸ nature of transaction,⁵⁹ nature of possession,⁶⁰ necessity for appointment of deputy officer,⁶¹ negligence,⁶² ownership,⁶³ proximate cause,⁶⁴ real or personal character of property,⁶⁵ soundness of mind,⁶⁶ status of a party,⁶⁷ and the terms of an agreement.⁶⁸

Findings and conclusions will not be implied, however, unless they are a legitimate inference to be drawn from the language used,⁶⁹ and a finding will not be implied when such implied finding would conflict with an express finding,⁷⁰ nor are specific statements in a special finding to be controlled or modified by inferences suggested by uncertain or equivocal expressions.⁷¹ In other words, a finding or conclusion will not constitute a determination as to matters or issues beyond its logical scope or meaning.⁷² Thus where plaintiff's affirmative case is wholly inconsistent with the truth of defendant's case, the conclusive establishment of the former is necessarily a complete negative of the latter.⁷³ Findings will not be interpolated by implication where the findings expressly stated follow in such logical and closely connected sequence as to prevent it.⁷⁴ Findings will not be construed as mere inferences from other facts found where they are clearly independent findings from the entire evidence.⁷⁵ Where findings are made substantially in the language of the pleadings, they do not include issues not raised by the pleadings.⁷⁶

Negative findings. Findings need not expressly negative every possible exception or qualification of the facts found,⁷⁷ since an implied negation necessarily exists where the facts found are inconsistent with those not found.⁷⁸ A finding in the form of a negative pregnant attempting to negative an affirmative allegation implies the truth of the allegation.⁷⁹ The lack of a finding as to a directed verdict is negatively a finding of fact conclusive on the parties where each party moves for a directed verdict.⁸⁰

Ultimate facts. A finding of ultimate facts includes by implication a finding of all probative or evidentiary facts necessary to sustain it,⁸¹ and a finding that contradictory probative declarations are untrue.⁸²

Implication to support judgment. In accordance with the general rule that findings will be construed to support the judgment, as discussed supra § 646, wherever from the facts expressly found other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment, such inference will be made,⁸³ and it has been

Findings as conclusions generally

Unless they are clothed in the very words of the evidence on which they are based, practically all findings of ultimate or general facts are conclusions of fact based on detailed facts and circumstances shown by the evidence.

held that entry of a decree imports a finding of subsidiary facts necessary to warrant it.⁸⁴ Conversely, the court will not ordinarily imply findings which would defeat the judgment.⁸⁵

Findings as to truth of allegations. A general finding as to the truth of allegations in a pleading is equivalent to a special finding respecting facts alleged therein,⁸⁶ and the absence of express findings as to such facts is immaterial.⁸⁷ A finding that all the allegations of a pleading are true has been construed as a finding of the truth not only of what is expressly alleged,⁸⁸ but also of what may reasonably be implied from the allegations,⁸⁹ and a finding that the allegations of a complaint are true is an implied finding of the facts therein alleged.⁹⁰ A finding that all of the denials and allegations in an answer to a specified complaint are, each and every one, supported by the evidence and true, is equivalent to a finding that each allegation of such complaint is untrue.⁹¹ Where the court finds that all of the allegations of the complaint are true except as specifically otherwise mentioned, and thereafter finds on a specific matter, a failure to find on a specific aspect of such matter is a finding that such allegation was not true.⁹² Where all the allegations of defendant's answer are found to be true, except as otherwise expressly found, every affirmative allegation set up by defendant which is not expressly found against him is found in his favor.⁹³

General findings that allegations of a pleading are untrue means merely that the pleader did not prove what he alleged,⁹⁴ and will not be construed as affirmatively establishing the contrary of the allegations,⁹⁵ although a finding that each and all of the allegations touching a particular matter are untrue has been construed as equivalent to a finding that the facts were the contrary of what was alleged.⁹⁶ A finding that all of the allegations of a pleading "are not true" is not a finding that all of them are untrue,⁹⁷ or that any particular one of them is untrue.⁹⁸ Finding that all of the allegations of the pleadings not embraced within the express findings of fact are not true should not be construed as negating the truth of express admissions of the pleadings.⁹⁹ A finding that all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are untrue, and that all of the allegations of defendant's answer are true negatives plaintiff's allegations.¹ Where the court finds substantially in accordance with the facts alleged in an affirmative defense, other allegations in the answer in conflict therewith must be deemed to have been found untrue, without an express finding to that effect.²

Refusal or failure to find. A denial by the court of proposed findings of fact is equivalent to a finding to the contrary.³ Refusal to find a fact requested is not necessarily equivalent to an affirmative finding to the contrary,⁴ although where the record shows that the court found for defendant on one affirmative defense only, it has been held that an inference arises that it found against defendant on all other affirmative defenses.⁵ A refusal to grant requests for findings does not imply a ruling that contrary findings made by the court are required as a matter of law.⁶

An omission of the findings to cover a particular fact or issue is to be deemed a finding, on that fact or issue, against the party having the burden of proof,⁷ and any fact in issue which was not found by the trial court must be considered as not having been proved.⁸ Where the record indicates that the court would not make a finding and it further indicates the reason of the court for refusing to do so, the failure to find is not equivalent to a finding against the party having the burden of proof.⁹ Where there is no evidence that a party intended or attempted to do a particular matter, a failure to make a finding on such point is not a finding against such party.¹⁰ Where the court finds against defendant on one specification of negligence, the failure of the court to mention other specifications of negligence contained in the petition does not constitute findings thereon adverse to plaintiff.¹¹ Where, under statute, a finding is required that a record was made in good faith in the regular course of business in order to render the record admissible, the exclusion of the record, without any express finding as to the circumstances, indicates a finding to the contrary.¹²

§ 650. — General and Special Findings

In the absence of special findings in irreconcilable conflict therewith, a general finding imports a finding of all subsidiary facts necessary to render it sufficient and support it, and a general finding for one party is equivalent to a special finding in his favor.

necessary to pass on the other issues posed, the court does not determine any issues except those specifically adjudicated, even though a general finding is made.²¹ It has been held that a general finding for plaintiff in an action for negligence does not necessarily imply a finding in his favor on an issue of contributory negligence.²²

Generally, findings of fact are conclusive on the rights of the parties as to the issues necessarily involved and passed on.

Generally speaking, findings of fact are conclusive on the rights of the parties as to the issues necessarily involved and passed on,²³ until formally set aside by the trial or appellate court.²⁴ Findings are, however, not conclusive where unauthorized,²⁵ not necessary to judgment,²⁶ or purely optional.²⁷ An adverse finding on one cause of action is not determinative of another cause of action.²⁸ It has been held that a mere finding has no effect since it cannot be levied on or given a judgment lien,²⁹ and the most a finding might possibly be considered to be is a cause of action.³⁰

The findings and conclusions prepared and filed by the trial judge as a part of the record of the case cannot be contradicted by oral statements of the judge at the time of his rendition of judgment.³¹ Where a purported finding of fact is a mere conclusion that the evidence is not sufficient to authorize relief, it is the same in legal effect as though the court had sustained a general demurrer to the complaint and dismissed the action.³² It is within the province of the trial court to determine whether the findings of fact and conclusions of law it filed were merely preliminary or whether it intended them to be final when filed.³³ Findings of fact made at the request of a party are of the same force and effect as though embodied in the decision.³⁴ Where the court files a memorandum order for judgment and later files findings of fact to the contrary, the findings prevail over the memorandum.³⁵ Findings speak as of the date of complaint.³⁶

Similarity to verdict of jury or finding of referee. The findings and conclusions of the trial court have the effect of a verdict,³⁷ a general finding for one of the parties being equivalent to a general verdict;³⁸ and findings of fact, when made, are analo-

Where on day court without request from either party made what was designated as findings of fact and conclusions of law, the memorandum did not constitute "findings of fact" or "conclusions of law" as contemplated by statute and amounted to nothing more than its reasons for conclusion reached and did not have the effect of a special verdict—Lessner v. § 652. Objections and Exceptions

Particular matters with respect to objections and exceptions to findings of fact and conclusions of law are discussed infra §§ 653-657.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 653. — Necessity

Advantage cannot be taken of errors and defects in the findings of fact or conclusions of law unless presented by proper and timely objection.

In general, errors and defects in the findings of fact⁴¹ or conclusions of law⁴² cannot be taken advantage of unless presented by proper and timely objection. This rule is applicable, for example to such matters as a lack of findings⁴³ or of special findings,⁴⁴ or defects in the findings made;⁴⁵ and a party who has failed to object will not be heard to complain that findings were not sufficiently specific,⁴⁶ that they were in a form other than that prescribed by law,⁴⁷ or that the findings were not warranted by the evidence.⁴⁸ However, a party is not concluded by findings of fact because of failure to except to them where, the judgment being wholly in his favor, he cannot appeal from it or file any bill of exceptions.⁴⁹ Failure to except to the findings of fact does not preclude one from later objecting to the conclusions of law.⁵⁰ It has been held that no exception lies to a simple finding of fact,⁵¹ and, where a party is entitled to a finding on a material issue, the failure to object is not a waiver of the failure to find at all on a material issue.⁵² The statement by the court that all rights on appeal would be protected and that it would allow an exception in the event the ruling would be adverse to either side does not obviate the necessity of entering specific objections to such rulings and findings as are objected to.⁵³

The right to object for supposed errors of decision cannot be affected by the absence of a written finding. Objections and exceptions to errors and defects in findings and conclusions must be urged in the mode prescribed by local practice.

The right to except for supposed errors of decision cannot be affected by the absence of a written finding.⁵⁴ Where the statute so provides, no exception will lie to the rulings of the trial court in matters of law unless the right to except is specially reserved before the hearing.⁵⁵ The entry of judgment simultaneously with the filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law, without giving defendant an opportunity to present and argue his exceptions, is error.⁵⁶

Mode. Objections and exceptions to errors and defects in findings and conclusions must be urged in the mode prescribed by local practice,⁵⁷ for example, the proper procedure for testing conclusions of law on special findings is by taking or reserving exceptions to such conclusions⁵⁸ and not to the findings,⁵⁹ although, after the disposal of such exceptions, the correctness of the facts specially found or the failure of the court to find certain facts may be questioned by a motion for a new trial or by a motion for venire de novo,⁶⁰ and where the right of a party to take exceptions is confined by statute to rulings in matters of law, the party must have a distinct statement made of the ruling or opinion of the court on the matters of law involved in the issue.⁶¹ The proper procedure may be a motion to make necessary findings.⁶²

In some jurisdictions, the proper remedy of a party aggrieved at defective findings is an application or motion to the trial court for their amendment or correction.⁶³ Where the appropriate remedy is by motion for new trial or venire de novo, it is not error for the court to overrule motions to alter,⁶⁴ amend,⁶⁵ change,⁶⁶ correct,⁶⁷ correct and restate,⁶⁸ modify,⁶⁹ or reconsider⁷⁰ findings, al-

Challenge of finding

In tort action, motion to correct trial judge's ruling, granting defendant's request that evidence warranted finding for defendant, on ground that defendant was not sufficiently identified in evidence as person involved in accident, was properly denied as having nothing to do with correction of any ruling of law, but amounting to no more than challenge of judge's finding, but such question should have been raised by appropriate requests for rulings before closing arguments or within such time thereafter as court might allow—Godfrey v. conclusions by exception thereto, motions to substitute other findings⁸¹ or conclusions⁸² are not recognized as proper procedure.

Motions to strike. A motion to strike certain paragraphs of the conclusion is not the proper way to attack their soundness.⁸³ In jurisdictions where the appropriate remedy for defective findings of fact is by motion for new trial, the court may properly overrule a motion to strike,⁸⁴ and a motion to strike on the ground that findings are without the issues may be entertained only when a request for a special finding of facts has been made and special findings have been filed pursuant thereto.⁸⁵

Motion for judgment on the findings. In jurisdictions where objection to conclusions of law should be taken by exception thereto, objection to such conclusions may not be taken by motion for judgment on the special findings.⁸⁶

Motion for judgment notwithstanding the findings has been held not the proper remedy of the party against whom the findings are made.⁸⁷

Unless otherwise provided by statute or rule of court, exception must be taken at the time the ruling in question is made.

In the absence of a statute or rule of court to the contrary, an exception to findings of fact or conclusions of law must be taken at the time the ruling is made,⁸⁸ or within a reasonable time thereafter,⁸⁹ as, for example, on presentation and allowance of a bill of exceptions,⁹⁰ and what is a reasonable time will depend on the particular circumstances involved.⁹¹ It is too late to except to a finding after the decision is made.⁹² Where the time for objecting is specified by statute,⁹³ or rule of court,⁹⁴ an objection or exception made thereafter is ordinarily too late, and the fact that a motion to dismiss was then pending will not excuse failure to except at the specified time.⁹⁵ Under a statute providing that, if either party is not in court or represented in court at the time of the announcement of the decision, the clerk shall mail a written notice thereof to such absent party, where no notice is mailed to an absent party, exceptions may properly be made a reasonable time after expiration of the period set by court rule.⁹⁶ Where exceptions precede a decree it is the duty of the court to dispose of them.⁹⁷

Statutes in terms permitting exceptions to rulings or directions where objections were seasonably made have been construed as requiring objections to be made seasonably,⁹⁸ and it has been held that in order to be seasonable a request for a report of the facts must be made before or at the time the cause is submitted.⁹⁹ Under a statute providing that exceptions to rulings, directions, and decisions made during a hearing in a cause shall be taken immediately, and that exceptions to the final decision in a cause heard by a court without a jury may be taken within a prescribed period after notice of the decision, exceptions to a decision for defendant at the close of plaintiff's testimony may be taken within the prescribed period instead of immediately.¹ Where, under the statute, exceptions to findings may be filed at any time within ten days after service of a copy of the decision and a written notice of entry of judgment thereon, and where a copy of the decision has not been served, the time for filing exceptions has not expired.² Under a statute providing that exceptions to findings of fact or conclusions of law in a decision of a court on a cause tried without a jury may be taken orally at the time the decision is signed, or by filing written exceptions within five days after the filing of the decision, where the record shows that the trial court noted exceptions the day after the findings were signed and on the same day that the findings were filed, it will be presumed that oral exceptions were made in time;³ and under the provision as to filing of written exceptions, the five-day period runs from the date of the actual signing of findings by the trial judge,⁴ and not from the date of preparation and serving of proposed findings.⁵ Where the court enters its findings on two different occasions, exceptions are in time if filed within the prescribed period after filing of the last exceptions.⁶ Under a further provision of such statute that, where the decision is signed subsequently to the hearing and in the absence of the exceptant, exception may be taken by filing written exceptions within five days after service on him of a copy of the decision or of written notice of its filing, the right to except continues until five days after notice of the filing,⁷ or until five days after actual notice,⁸ which is equivalent to service of notice,⁹ but may not be taken thereafter.¹⁰

*The court may not extend the time prescribed by statute for filing exceptions.*¹¹

Filing nunc pro tunc. Where exceptions are seasonably offered, but not filed because judgment has been prematurely entered, after setting aside of the premature judgment, they may be entered nunc pro tunc as of the date offered.¹² There is authority

holding that in actions of an equitable nature it is within the discretion of one sitting as chancellor to permit nunc pro tunc filing of exceptions after expiration of the time prescribed in a case where refusal would be productive of injustice or exceptional hardship.¹³ Where exceptions to findings are not filed within the time required by court rules, because plaintiff did not receive notice of the filing thereof and his attorney was absent from the jurisdiction at the time, a petition to file exceptions nunc pro tunc will be granted.¹⁴

Premature exception, such as one made to a decision before it is reduced to writing, is ineffectual.¹⁵

§ 656. — Form and Sufficiency

In the absence of statute or rule of court to the contrary, no particular form or mode of making and saving exceptions to findings of fact and conclusions of law is required.

In the absence of a statute or rule of court to the contrary,¹⁶ no particular form or mode of making and saving exceptions to findings of fact and conclusions of law is required.¹⁷ It must, however, appear that what counsel did at the time was intended to preserve the question for review by a higher court,¹⁸ and a mere statement by counsel that he disagrees with the court is not equivalent to an exception.¹⁹ An objection that a finding is a mere conclusion is not valid since the finding should be a conclusion.²⁰ Exceptions which are allowed to a refusal to find cannot be treated as substitutes for exceptions to the findings as made.²¹ An exception by a party that that party, as a defendant in one case and plaintiff in the other, had duly excepted to the general finding, has been held to be insufficient.²²

Broadside exception

An exception to the signing of the judgment and to findings of fact is a broadside exception which merely challenges sufficiency of facts found to support the judgment entered.—Warshaw v. Warshaw, 73 S.E. 2d 900, 236 N.C. 754.

An exception to the judgment is unnecessary where an exception is taken to the conclusion of law on which the judgment is based,²³ and exceptions to the judgment when rendered have been held sufficient to support objections to the findings and conclusions filed by the court.²⁴

Specification of error or ground of objection. Ordinarily, exceptions should not be general but should specifically point out the error complained of.²⁵ It is the rule that a general exception is of no avail where any of the findings or conclusions are correct,²⁶ although, since there is no need of exceptions being more specific than the findings objected to, general exceptions are sometimes held sufficient;²⁷ and, where all the findings of fact or conclusions of law excepted to are erroneous, a general exception is sufficient.²⁸

Joint exception. A joint exception to more than one conclusion of law presents no question if any one is correct.²⁹ Where two defendants make a joint exception to a conclusion of law which is correct as to one of them, the exception is not available to the other defendant.³⁰

XI. WAIVER AND CORRECTION OF IRREGULARITIES AND ERRORS

§ 658. Irregularities in Preliminary Proceedings, Rulings, and Conduct of Trial in General

Errors and irregularities in the conduct of the trial or the proceedings preliminary thereto may be waived

§ 657. — Effect

An exception to conclusions of law operates as an admission, for the purposes of the exception, that all the facts within the issues are fully and correctly found.

An exception to conclusions of law operates as an admission, for the purposes of the exception, that all the facts within the issues are fully and correctly found,³¹ and supported by the evidence,³² but will not supply a material fact not found,³³ or admit that the facts found were within the issues;³⁴ and, in determining the correctness of the conclusions of law, the reviewing court is limited to the facts found regardless of the sufficiency of the evidence to support them.³⁵ An exception to a finding of fact has been held to present only the question of whether there is any evidence to support it.³⁶ The sustaining of exceptions generally has the same effect as it would have on a verdict.³⁷ An exception to a finding has been held to be in effect, if not in form, the same as if taken to a judgment based on the facts found.³⁸ Where a motion to strike off exceptions is answered by a party, the averments of the answer must be taken as admitted in the absence of depositions.³⁹

Function of exception to a conclusion of law is analogous to that of demurrer. In that, even admitting as true the facts as found, the conclusion of law is not supported by the facts—Kerfoot v. Kessener, 84 N.E. 2d 190, 227 Ind. 58.

act of the complaining party amounting to an express or implied assent to the improper procedure.⁴⁰ Voluntary compliance with an erroneous order of the court may be a waiver of the right to except.⁴¹ Even a fundamental error, it has been held, may be waived unless it is of such a nature as to render the judgment void.⁴² The power to correct errors in their own proceedings is inherent in courts of general jurisdiction,⁴³ and errors in rulings, which are clearly corrected by the court before the trial closes or in the charge of the court to the jury, are not generally fatal to the judgment.⁴⁴ If counsel has induced the court to commit error, he cannot thereafter complain of the action of the court in correcting such error.⁴⁵

On the other hand, conduct not amounting to an express or implied assent to the error is not a waiver thereof,⁴⁶ and the form of a trial, as prescribed by statute, is a matter of public interest and cannot be changed by agreement of the par-

Reopening case

A party offering additional testimony after parties have rested on discovering that such action has operated adversely to his interests will not be permitted to repudiate additional testimony and claim that court had no right to take such action.—Heron v. Gaylor, 126 P.2d 295, 46 N.M. 230.

Participation in hearing

A litigant cannot participate in a hearing and, on realizing that the decision of the court will be adverse to his cause or interest, request the court to withhold its decision and proceed as if no hearing had been held.—Jordan v. State Highway Dept., 198 S.E. 174, 188 S.C. 83.

Motion that witness be rebuked

Defendant's counsel, moving for rebuke of plaintiff's witness because of improper, unresponsive statement on direct examination, waived exception to previous refusal of mistrial on such ground.—United Motor Freight Terminal Co. v. Hixon, 48 S.E.2d 769, 77 Ga.App. 506.

Submission of exhibits to jury

Where court ruled that only certain of the documents requested by defendant would be sent to the jury room, whereupon defendant moved that none of the documents be sent into the jury room unless all of them were sent, defendant waived his motion to send certain exhibits into the jury room.—Continental Fire & Cas. Ins. Corp. v. Drummond, Tex. Civ.App., 220 S.W.2d 922, error refused no reversible error.

Issues tried together

Where trial court suggested that both attachment and debt issues be tried together and both sides acquiesced and went ahead and tried whole lawsuit, if court was in error, such error was waived.—Christopher v. Brown, 51 So.2d 579, 211 Miss. 322.

Failure to obtain ruling

If a party permits the court to proceed to judgment without action on his motion or objection, he will be held to have waived the right to have the motion or objection acted on.—In re Coleman's Estate, 28 N.W. 2d 500, 238 Iowa 768.

A party could not comply with order requiring him to produce certain of his books and records on trial in action on notes and then object to introduction of records produced on ground that order was improper, since his remedy would be by appropriate proceedings to resist the order and not by objection to introduction of records.—Selig Cahn, Inc. v. Purpose of statute

Statute providing that mistake or defect may be corrected in discretion of court at any stage of action, special proceeding, or appeal is remedial in nature with respect to procedure, to end that slight mistakes or irregularities not affecting merits or substantial right of party shall not invalidate proceedings.—People ex rel. Di Leo v. Edwards, 286 N.Y.S. 840, 247 App.Div. 331.

Wash.—Miller v. O'Brien, 137 P.2d 525, 17 Wash.2d 758.

Motion to reopen evidence

Motion of defendant's counsel to reopen evidence and allow them to put on witnesses for defendant, after error had been committed in denying defendant's counsel the right to open and conclude arguments on no evidence being introduced for defendant, did not constitute a waiver or ratification of the error.—Phillips v. Smith, 47 S.E.2d 156, 76 Ga.App. 705.

Explicit objection to ruling

Where appellant's counsel in replying to remark of trial court that it had right to lay down rule on impeachment of witness and if counsel had any authorities to contrary to produce them stated "I don't think it is of that much consequence, your honor, and I just take an exception to the ruling of the Court," counsel's statement was not waiver of alleged prejudicial remarks of trial court.—Travelers Ins. Co. v. Simon, Tex.Civ.App., 136 S.W.2d 674.

Submission of issue

A plaintiff does not waive his right to question the propriety of submitting the issue of his alleged wilful and wanton conduct by giving instructions that he is obliged to give.—Goldschmidt v. Chicago Transit Authority, 82 N.E.2d 357, 335 Ill.App. 461.

ties.⁴⁷ So it has been held that compliance with an erroneous order that a cause be tried on depositions does not waive the error;⁴⁸ and where the defendant's right to open and close the arguments to the jury was denied, the error is not cured by the fact that plaintiff's counsel, during final argument for plaintiff, states that he is willing that defendant's attorney shall conclude the argument after plaintiff's counsel has finished, in which statement the court acquiesces, where defendant's attorney declines the offer.⁴⁹

Preliminary proceedings. Errors and irregularities in the proceedings preliminary to the trial may be waived and cured by some affirmative act of the complaining party amounting to an express or implied assent to the improper procedure;⁵⁰ but conduct not amounting to an express or implied assent to the error or irregular procedure is not a waiver thereof.⁵¹

§ 659. —Curing Improper Remarks or Conduct of Judge by Instruction or Withdrawal of Remarks

Improper remarks or conduct on the part of the judge may ordinarily be cured, and the impropriety obviated, by admonishing or instructing the jury to disregard them.

Improper remarks or conduct on the part of the judge presiding at the trial of an action may ordinarily be cured, or the impropriety obviated, by admonishing or instructing the jury to disregard them,⁵² or by withdrawing or correcting improper comments,⁵³ or even, it has been held, by an instruction stating the correct rule of law to be applied in deciding the matter to which the comment related,⁵⁴ or directing the jury not to consider the evidence to which the remark related,⁵⁵ or advising the jury that they are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact;⁵⁶ but where a remark or conduct is so prejudicial that the impression thereby produced in the minds of the jury cannot reasonably be expected to be removed by an admonition or corrective statement, the impropriety is not thereby cured,⁵⁷ nor is the error cured where the form and substance of the corrective statement is not sufficient to remove the prejudicial effect of the improper conduct or remark.⁵⁸ An admonition to disregard previous improprieties, or a correction of them, is not itself ordinarily improper or objectionable;⁵⁹ but if the judge in attempting to correct an impression produced by prior improper remarks or conduct succeeds only in reiterating or emphasizing it,⁶⁰ or on the other hand goes so far as to leave a contrary and equally improper impression,⁶¹ impropriety still exists.

§ 660. Rulings as to Evidence

Errors or irregularities with respect to evidence may be waived or cured.

Errors or irregularities in rulings with respect to evidence may be waived⁶² or such errors or irregularities in rulings may be corrected.⁶³ A motion for a peremptory instruction at the close of the evidence is not a waiver of exceptions to rulings on evidence.⁶⁴ Where an objection that a certified copy of a document is not the best evidence is waived, it is error to exclude it.⁶⁵

§ 661. — Admission

Error in the admission of evidence may be waived by some subsequent affirmative act amounting to an express or implied assent to the reception of the evidence.

The erroneous admission of evidence may be waived or cured by stipulation or consent of the parties,⁶⁶ or by some affirmative act done after the ruling on the admission of the evidence which amounts to an express or implied assent to the reception of the evidence,⁶⁷ or by acts or statements inconsistent with objections previously urged,⁶⁸ and where the attorney for the party who seeks to introduce certain papers states that he will offer them in evidence if his opponent will not object to their competency but will confine his objection to their materiality, and the attorney for the other party assents, objection to their competency is waived.⁶⁹ Error in the admission of evidence is not waived by conduct not amounting to an express or implied assent to the reception of the evidence.⁷⁰

Objections to evidence have been held to be waived by objecting to a withdrawal, or the striking of the evidence,⁷¹ although there is also au-permitting plaintiff to recall a witness for further examination after having announced close of plaintiff's case, and after defendant had argued his motion for a directed verdict.—Norman v. Jefferson City Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Mo App., 211 S.W.2d 552.

In action on written contract under which father agreed to make his illegitimate child father's sole heir trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting amendment to petition, after motion for directed verdict was made, pleading loss of the written contract, and any error in admitting evidence concerning contents of the contract was cured by the amendment.—*Hehr's Adm'r v. In cases tried by jury, exceptions to the reception of evidence are not waived by failure to except to the charge of the court.—Holton v. Ellis, 49 A.2d 210, 114 Vt. 471.

Trial in accordance with ruling

Action of a defendant in action for breach of contract, in proceeding to try case in accordance with ruling of trial court overruling defendant's objection to admission of evidence, was not a waiver of objection to admission of such evidence.—Fred J. Brotherton, Inc. v. Kreihsheimer, 92 A.2d 57, 22 N.J. Super. 355.

Reference to matter on voir dire

Where, in tort action, plaintiffs had sought to keep issue of covenant not to sue out of case by filing motion to strike that portion of answer which set forth covenant as defense, but motion was overruled, it was proper for plaintiffs to examine jury on voir dire on such question, and in doing so, plaintiffs did not waive their objection to the introduction of the covenant.—De Lude v. Rimek, 115 N.E.2d 561, 351 Ill.App. 466.

Failure to accept mistrial

thority to the contrary.⁷² Error in allowing a witness to answer a question objected to is cured where the court sustains an objection to the answer.⁷³ Valid objections to evidence may be obviated by supplying deficiencies later in the trial,⁷⁴ or by an amendment of the pleadings.⁷⁵ Thus, the admission of evidence prima facie inadmissible may be cured by the subsequent introduction of the necessary preliminary and connecting proof.⁷⁶ Where, after adverse rulings on objections to evidence, motion to strike, and for a nonsuit, defendant proceeds with the case and introduces evidence which supplies the defects in plaintiff's proof, the error is cured.⁷⁷ It has been held that objections to the admission of secondary evidence are waived if the party objecting subsequently produces the best evidence himself,⁷⁸ or if he fails to object to the introduction of other secondary evidence as to the same matter.⁷⁹ Objections to evidence are not waived by a subsequent amendment of the record making the evidence admissible,⁸⁰ or, ordinarily, by failure to cross-examine a witness giving incompetent testimony over objection.⁸¹

Withdrawal, striking, or excluding improper evidence. Where erroneous evidence is withdrawn by an instruction,⁸² or where it is stricken on motion of the objecting party,⁸³ and the jury instructed to disregard it,⁸⁴ or the court, after receiving evidence over objections, rules that it is incompetent, and excludes it,⁸⁵ error in its admission is cured, in the absence of exceptional circumstances.⁸⁶ Error in the admission of evidence may be cured by an instruction limiting the purposes for which it may be considered.⁸⁷

Error in permitting a question and answer so couched as to bring out a conclusion invading the province of the jury is cured where the question and answer are withdrawn and properly reframed.⁸⁸ Exception to the admission of evidence is not waived by motion to strike it, where the court denies the motion,⁸⁹ and where objection is properly made to the admission of evidence and an exception taken to the overruling of the objection, the objecting party does not waive the objection by moving to exclude all the evidence of the witness, some of which is admissible.⁹⁰

Withdrawal of objections. The erroneous admission of evidence is waived by a subsequent withdrawal of objections thereto;⁹¹ but the waiver must be so specific as to leave no doubt on the subject,⁹² and a mere statement by counsel, after the evidence objected to has been received, that he is willing to try the issue to which the evidence relates does not show a waiver.⁹³ A party who withdraws his objection to evidence which has been excluded does not thereby waive his right to object to leading questions asked the witness when he is recalled to testify.⁹⁴

Subsequent introduction or use of same or similar evidence. It is a general rule, subject to some exceptions and qualifications, that a party waives his objection to the admission of evidence by subsequent ly introducing the same⁹⁵ or similar⁹⁶ evidence, or evidence to the same effect or relating to the same matter;⁹⁷ and the same result follows where the party objecting to the admission of the evidence subsequently uses it for his own purposes.⁹⁸ A subsequent reference by both parties to incompetent evidence cures error in its admission.⁹⁹

On the other hand, it has been held that a party does not waive error in the admission of evidence over his objections by subsequently introducing evidence of the same general character;¹ that where the objection of defendants, relying on the statute of frauds, to the introduction of oral statements is overruled, they do not waive the objection by voluntarily testifying to their understanding of such statements;² that, in an action on a note, plaintiff's introduction of correspondence between the parties after the debt was incurred, in negotiations for a settlement, and showing the contentions of the parties, was not a waiver of the parol evidence rule;³ that a person sued for malicious prosecution does not waive error in the admission of evidence on the issue of probable cause by presenting evidence tending to show nonliability notwithstanding want of probable cause,⁴ and that a party, by agreeing to what the tax records would show as to the assessed value of land for general taxation, does not waive his previous objection to the competency of such evidence.⁵

Where a party, after objecting to the admission of a document, offers such document in evidence,⁶ or asks that it go to the jury,⁷ or uses it for his own purposes,⁸ he waives his previous objection; and an objection to the admission of part of a memorandum used by a witness to refresh his memory is waived where the opposing party introduces the rest of it.⁹ So error in admitting in evidence certified copies of indictments against a party is waived where he testifies that such indictments had been returned against him.¹⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that where, after a document had been admitted and marked in evidence, over objection, the objecting party asks that it be shown to the jury, he does not waive the benefit of his exception,¹¹ and a party does not waive his objection to the admission of a document by insisting that the entire document be read and not only the portions unfavorable to him,¹² but it has also been held that where a party's objection to the introduction of part of a statement is overruled, he waives the error by offering in evidence the entire statement.¹³

Introduction of evidence in rebuttal. A party does not ordinarily waive his objection to the erroneous admission of evidence by subsequently introducing evidence to disprove the matters testified to, to explain them or to prove facts inconsistent therewith,¹⁴ even though it is of the same kind or nature.¹⁵

Cross-examination or reexamination as to objectionable matter. As a general rule, a party does not waive his previous objection to the admission of improper evidence merely by cross-examining the witness with respect to the objectionable matter,¹⁶ unless he makes the witness his own.¹⁷ However, according to some authority a party waives his objection to the testimony of a witness by going into the matter on cross-examination¹⁸ without reserving his objection.¹⁹ It has also been held that, while a cross-examination with respect to incompetent testimony admitted over objection may be made without waiving the objection, the cross-examiner cannot rely on his original objection, where he has the witness embody such incompetent evi-

In Ohio

(1) Defendant did not waive his objection to admission of expert's opinion testimony for plaintiff by cross-examining witness or later offering evidence in conformity to ruling admitting such testimony.—Ross v. Stricker, 88 N.E.2d 80, 85 Ohio App. 56, reversed on other grounds 91 N.E.2d 18, 153 Ohio St. 153.

(2) Where defendant cross-examined plaintiff's witness quite fully with respect to gouge marks on highway at place of collision of trucks and also with respect to location and relative positions, after collision, of damaged trucks and debris, defendant waived right to object on appeal as to improper action of trial court in overruling defendant's objection to opinion evidence given by such witness on direct examination with respect to gouge marks.—Patterson v. George F. Alger Co., Ohio App., 112 N.E.2d 65.

In Tennessee

(1) Defendant has been held to waive error in admitting plaintiff's testimony in answer to defendant's motion to set aside default judgment by cross-examining plaintiff.—Fidelity-Phenix Fire Ins. Co. v. Oliver, 152 S.W.2d 254, 25 Tenn.App. 114

(2) It has also been held, however, that a litigant does not waive objection to incompetent testimony by cross-examination to break force of such testimony if witness, on cross-examination, repeats evidence given on direct examination.—Gulf Refining Co. v. Frazier, 83 S.W.2d 285, 19 Tenn. App. 76.

dence in his cross-examination²⁰ or where the cross-examination is extended beyond the scope of the evidence on direct examination.²¹

Objection to evidence introduced in cross-examination is waived by asking substantially the same question on re-examination in chief.²² On the other hand, it has been held that re-examination by plaintiff of a witness on matters elicited on cross-examination by defendant over plaintiff's objection does not waive all objections made to the relevancy of the cross-examination.²³

Demurrer to evidence and motion to dismiss or to direct verdict. While it has been held in some jurisdictions that a party does not waive his objections to evidence by a demurrer to the evidence,²⁴ it has been held in other jurisdictions that such objections are waived by demurring to the evidence,²⁵ or by a motion to dismiss,²⁶ or to direct a verdict.²⁷

Request for instructions. The admission of incompetent evidence is waived where the complaining party asks and obtains an instruction which assumes the competency of the evidence complained of,²⁸ and, where evidence affecting the measure of damages is admitted, the party objecting to its admission waives his objection by requesting instructions which embody the same theory on the measure of damages.²⁹ On the other hand, an objection to improper evidence is not waived by a request for an instruction limiting the prejudicial effect of the evidence.³⁰ It has been held that the right to challenge the competency of evidence admitted over objection is not waived by offering instructions on the issue presented by such evidence,³¹ and that, where a case is tried on a theory to which proper objection is made, the fact that the objecting party requests instructions which he deems necessary for his protection does not waive error in the overruling of his objections to the admission of evidence in accordance with the theory objected to.³²

§ 662. — Exclusion

A party may waive or estop himself to object to the exclusion of evidence; error in the exclusion of evidence is cured by its subsequent admission.

A party may waive or estop himself to object to the exclusion of evidence,³³ and error in the exclusion of evidence is cured by its subsequent admission.³⁴ An exception to the exclusion of evidence is waived by action of the party, after the ruling, inconsistent with the exception.³⁵ So error in excluding evidence is waived where the objection to it is withdrawn and the evidence is not reoffered,³⁶ or where the court reverses its ruling and offers to permit the evidence to be introduced and the offer is declined.³⁷ The voluntary dismissal of a cross complaint by defendant waives any error in excluding evidence offered in support of it.³⁸ Where evidence on which plaintiff's claim depends exclusively is erroneously excluded, he does not waive the error by failure to take a nonsuit,³⁹ since the ruling is reviewable on appeal of the final adverse judgment.⁴⁰ Where the court directs a verdict for defendant, without objection or exception by plaintiff, error in the exclusion of testimony is waived.⁴¹

§ 663. — Motion to Strike

Error in denying a motion to strike evidence improperly admitted may be waived by subsequent acts of the moving party.

Error in denying a motion to strike evidence improperly admitted may be waived by subsequent acts of the moving party,⁴⁴ as where the objection to the evidence is subsequently withdrawn⁴⁵ or the evidence is stricken by consent;⁴⁶ and the same result follows where the moving party refuses to consent to an offer of the other party to withdraw the evidence, thus causing it to remain before the jury.⁴⁷ A motion to strike testimony is waived where counsel, without waiting for a ruling on the motion, admonished the witness and proceeded with the examination.⁴⁸

§ 664. Misconduct of Counsel

Misconduct of counsel may be waived or cured by the subsequent conduct of the complaining party.

Misconduct of counsel in argument to the jury⁴⁹ or otherwise⁵⁰ may be waived or cured by the subsequent conduct of the complaining party. An objection to the misconduct of counsel in indicating to the jury that defendant was insured against liability has been held not to be waived by a failure to ask for a mistrial.⁵¹ Misconduct of plaintiff's counsel in suggesting to jurors on their examination that defendant carried liability insurance is waived by defendant's consent to proceed to impanel the jury from talesmen in attendance,⁵² but such misconduct is not waived by defendant's request that the court instruct the jury to disregard liability insurance.⁵³ Plaintiff's improper argument on the humanitarian doctrine is not waived by defendant's arguing to the jury what he considers to be such doctrine.⁵⁴

Curative instruction; reservation of error

(1) Where during trial of an action arising out of automobile collision, counsel for plaintiff asks question indicating that defendant has insurance, defendant waives appellate review of action of court in overruling motion to declare mistrial by agreeing to statement by court to jury that no insurance is carried by any party to suit, even though agreement is conditional on right to rely on error in refusing to declare a mistrial, if it were error.—Redding v. Hatcher, 14 Tenn.App. 561.

(2) Where motorist in requesting instruction concerning reference in testimony to an insurance company expressly stated that he was not waiving but was insisting on motion to discharge the jury because of such reference, motorist, by requesting the instruction, did not waive his right to urge that motion to discharge jury be sustained.—Pitcher v. Schoch, 139 S.W.2d 463, 345 Mo. 1184.

Subsequent disclosure by complaining party

(1) In action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, references to fact that plaintiff had made claim against his employer under Workmen's Compensation Law were unnecessary and improper, but where plaintiff's attorney in such action brought out, by request to charge and by statement made on trial, fact that plaintiff had received such compensation and that compensation carrier had lien on any recovery by plaintiff, any error in that regard was waived.—Johnson v. Gianino, 108 N.Y.S.2d 895, 279 App. Div. 760.

(2) Where defendant, in cross-examination, informed jury that he had insurance covering accident on which suit was brought, he was not in position to complain about action of trial judge in refusing to grant mistrial because of plaintiff's improper reference to insurance agent's visit to plaintiff.—Chilcote v. § 665. Rulings as to Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

Error in overruling a motion made at the close of the plaintiff's case, based on the insufficiency of the evidence, is waived by proceeding with the defense and introducing evidence in support thereof.

Objections relating to the sufficiency of the evidence, whether arising on demurrer to the evidence, as discussed infra § 666, motion for dismissal or nonsuit infra § 667, request for direction of verdict infra § 668, or otherwise,⁵⁵ may be waived or the defect in the proof cured.⁵⁶ Error in overruling a motion made at the close of plaintiff's case, based on the insufficiency of the evidence, is waived by proceeding with the defense and introducing evidence in support thereof,⁵⁷ provided, in some jurisdictions, the evidence so introduced supplies the defect in the proof.⁵⁸ Error in the denial of a motion to withdraw from the jury the question of damages for loss of earning capacity, because of lack of evidence, is cured by an instruction to the jury not to consider loss of earning capacity in reaching a verdict.⁵⁹ However, where, over the objection of defendant, an issue is submitted to the jury, defendant does not waive his objection by requesting an appropriate instruction on the issue submitted,⁶⁰ and defendant's submission of special interrogatories to the jury, after his objection to the sufficiency of the evidence is overruled, does not make the answers to such interrogatories binding on him, in the absence of evidence to support them.⁶¹ The right to question the sufficiency of the evidence is not lost by the withdrawal of a demurrer to the complaint,⁶² or by failure to request a peremptory instruction.⁶³ A party does not waive his right to go to the jury by leading the court to believe that he considers that there is no question for the jury, where, after the adverse party has moved for a direction of a verdict, and the court has intimated an intention to grant it, following the course taken in other cases, but before a verdict is actually directed, he asks to go to the jury on the whole case and excepts to the refusal of the court to allow him to do so.⁶⁴ A defendant does not waive his right to go to the jury on reasonable request, by moving to dismiss the complaint at the close of the whole case.⁶⁵

The defendant waives any error in the overruling of his demurrer, or motion in the nature thereof, at the close of the plaintiff's case where he does not stand on his demurrer, but introduces evidence in his own behalf, at least where such evidence supplies the deficiencies of the plaintiff's evidence.

Where, at the close of plaintiff's case, the court refuses an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, defendant may save the point by standing on his demurrer and abandoning the case at that point.⁶⁶ However, where defendant fails to take this course, and introduces evidence in his own behalf, after his demurrer, or motion in the nature thereof, has been overruled, error in overruling his demurrer is waived⁶⁷ at least where such evidence supplies the deficiencies of plaintiff's evidence,⁶⁸ and failure to rule on the demurrer is equivalent to overruling it within the waiver rule.⁶⁹ It has been held that the error in overruling the demurrer to the evidence is not waived where defendant's evidence does not supply the deficiency in plaintiff's proof,⁷⁰ and defendant's waiver of his demurrer by putting in his own case does not preclude him from insisting that on all the evidence produced by both sides, a prima facie case for plaintiff has not been established.⁷¹ Where defendant does not stand on his demurrer, but introduces evidence, the question of whether the evidence is sufficient to warrant the submission of plaintiff's case to the jury is to be determined on the basis of all of the evidence and not on plaintiff's evidence alone,⁷² and a second demurrer at the close of the whole case searches all the evidence to see if plaintiff's case was not aided by defendant's proof.⁷³ Where defendant introduces his evidence after his demurrer to plaintiff's evidence has been overruled, and does not, at the close of all the evidence, renew his demurrer⁷⁴ or move for a directed verdict,⁷⁵ he waives the right to contend that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the submission of plaintiff's case to the jury. Error in directing the jury, on demurrer to the evidence, to find the full amount of plaintiff's claim, is not cured by directing the jury further to consider their finding, and by their doing so and finding the same amount.⁷⁶

Request for instructions. Defendant has been held not to waive error in the refusal of an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence by asking further instructions to meet those given for plaintiff,⁷⁷ but this rule does not apply to the overruling of a demurrer to the evidence requested by plaintiff who, after such refusal, asks and secures an instruction inconsistent with his demurrer.⁷⁸ Where defendant does not file a written demurrer to the evidence, as required by statute, but joins plaintiff in offering, and having the court give instructions on the merits, he waives the overruling of his demurrer.⁷⁹

§ 667. — Dismissal or Nonsuit

Error in overruling a motion for dismissal or nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case is waived or cured where the defendant introduces evidence which supplies the defect in the plaintiff's proof, or where the evidence at the close of the entire case introduced by either party warrants a submission of the case to the jury.

Error in denying a motion for nonsuit may be waived or cured.⁸⁰ The declaration by defendant's counsel, on moving for a directed verdict, that a "clean-cut legal issue" was raised, is a waiver of exceptions to the refusal of a nonsuit.⁸¹ A motion for a new trial and for the dismissal of the complaint has been held not to deprive defendant of the right to rely on his earlier motion to dismiss.⁸²

Waiver by introducing evidence in behalf of defendant. It is well settled that error in overruling a motion for dismissal or nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case is waived or cured where defendant introduces evidence which supplies the defects in plaintiff's proof,⁸³ or where the evidence at the time both parties rest, introduced by either party, warrants a submission of plaintiff's case to the jury.⁸⁴ Where defendant does not stand on his

Several grounds of recovery; general demurrer

(1) It was formerly held that where the petition alleges several grounds for recovery, and defendant's general demurrer is overruled, and he thereafter does not ask instructions withdrawing the specific grounds of recovery from the consideration of the jury, he is estopped to claim that the evidence is insufficient to support a recovery as to the grounds of recovery as to which he requests instructions.—Curtis v. (2) However, this line of authority has now been overruled and defendant does not waive the error in overruling his demurrer at the close of the case by asking for or receiving instructions which are the converse of those given for plaintiff whether the petition alleges one or a number of grounds for recovery.—McGrew v. Thompson, 184 S.W.2d 994, 353 Mo. 856—Klotsch v. P. F. Collier & Son Corp., 159 S.W.2d 589, 349 Mo. 40—In re Thomason's Estate, 144 S.W.2d 79, 346 Mo. 911—Philbert v. motion to dismiss, but introduces evidence after the denial of the motion, he assumes the risk of supplying the deficiency in plaintiff's case,⁸⁵ and in determining the question the evidence will be considered in its entirety.⁸⁶ In some jurisdictions it is held that error in denying defendant's motion to dismiss is waived by the mere fact of defendant's introducing evidence,⁸⁷ at least unless the motion is renewed at the close of all the evidence.⁸⁸ Nevertheless, it is the rule in a number of jurisdictions that defendant does not waive an erroneous

As a general rule, the defendant waives error in the denial of his motion for a directed verdict at the close of the plaintiff's case where he thereafter introduces evidence, at least where the motion is not renewed at the close of the case or his proof supplies the deficiencies in the plaintiff's case.

Additional evidence by plaintiff

Where defendant moved to dismiss complaint at close of plaintiff's case, and again at conclusion of defendant's case renewed the motion and moved for a directed verdict, and the court reserved decision on such motions, and thereafter plaintiff recalled two witnesses and introduced additional testimony, and defendant failed to renew his motions for dismissal and for directed verdict, and issues were submitted to jury, defendant, not having renewed his motions at close of all the evidence, failed to preserve his right to move for such relief after the verdict had been received, even though plaintiff had failed to establish a prima facie case.—Buxhoeveden v. Estonian State Bank, 112 N.Y.S.2d 785, 279 App. Div. 1089, reargument denied 113 N.Y.S.2d 773, 280 App. Div. 806.

64 C.J. p 1300 note 20.

No waiver where motion is renewed

The advantage of defendants' exception to denial of their motion for nonsuit was not waived, where the motion was renewed at the close of the case and denied, and defendants thereupon duly excepted.—Gloshinsky v. Bergen Milk Transp. Co., 17 N.E.2d 766, 279 N.Y. 54.

direction of a verdict in his favor, by acts inconsistent with such motion.⁹⁰ Consent by both counsel that the court may direct a verdict for defendant is a waiver of all objections to such ruling.⁹¹ Where, after the refusal of a trial court to direct a verdict in his favor, defendant allows the jury to be discharged, and consents to a trial before the court, he will be held to have waived the error, if any, with respect to the ruling on his motion for a verdict;⁹² and, where defendant does not demur to the evidence, or waive his right to introduce evidence, should his motion for a directed verdict be overruled, but expressly reserves such right, he cannot object to the overruling of his motion.⁹³ It has also been held that defendant waives his right to object to the refusal of a peremptory instruction in his favor if he fails to offer an instruction with his motion,⁹⁴ or if he submits a peremptory instruction with a series of instructions;⁹⁵ but the denial of a motion for a peremptory instruction or direction of a verdict is not waived because, after the denial, movant requests proper instructions on the issues, or submits his case to the jury on general instructions as to the law of the case given at his request or with his consent.⁹⁶ So it has been held that a request for a general charge at the same time other instructions, which assume that the general charge will not be given, are requested, is not a waiver of the request for the general charge.⁹⁷

While it has been held that a party does not waive error in the denial of his motion for a directed verdict by thereafter requesting the submission of special issues or interrogatories,⁹⁸ the rule has been laid down that a party who requests that the case be submitted to the jury on special issues waives his right to a directed verdict,⁹⁹ and the right to complain of the finding of the jury on such issues;¹ but this rule is inapplicable where defendant, after the refusal of a peremptory instruction in his favor, requests the submission of an issue by a qualified motion which preserves his objection to the previous ruling,² or where defendant does not induce the court to submit an issue, but, after a refusal to direct a verdict in his favor, requests special charges on the issue, in an attempt to have the issue correctly submitted.³ A defendant does not waive his motion for a peremptory instruction because such motion is made at the close of all the evidence,⁴ or by his failure to except to a subsequent order restoring the case to the docket for retrial after the jury have failed to agree.⁵ An exception, saved to the denial of a motion for a directed verdict, is not waived by failure to except to a charge on the issue.⁶

Where the court directs a verdict in favor of one of defendants sued jointly and plaintiff elects to proceed against the remaining defendant, he has been held thereby to waive the right to complain of the directed verdict,⁷ but this rule does not apply

In Missouri

(1) In action tried subsequent to enactment of new code of civil procedure, plaintiff did not waive point raised by motion for directed verdict on ground that plaintiff asked instructions after motion was overruled.—Jacob Dold Packing Plant v. General Box Co., Mo.App., 194 S.W.2d 55.

(2) Prior thereto, it was held that a plaintiff who requested and received instruction on merits of case thereby waived his objection to refusal to give peremptory instruction.—Fawkes v. National Refining Co., 108 S.W.2d 7, 341 Mo. 630—Park v. Park, App., 190 S.W.2d 285—Green v. Boothe, 188 S.W.2d 84, 239 Mo.App. 73—Farmers Bank of Trenton v. Ray & Son, App., 167 S.W.2d 963—Frost v. questing instruction on merits—John Deere Plow Co. v. Cooper, 91 S.W.2d 145, 230 Mo.App. 167.

where a directed verdict against one defendant was entered simultaneously with the entry of a judgment declaring a mistrial as to the other defendants.⁸ Error in the direction of a verdict for defendant on one count is cured where a verdict for plaintiff on another count involving the same damage is allowed to stand.⁹ A party who has waived his right to go to the jury may, on obtaining an intimation from the court as to what he may do, withdraw from an acquiescence that the court shall direct the verdict, and ask to go to the jury.¹⁰

Waiver by introducing evidence after denial of motion. An exception to the ruling of the court denying a motion to direct a verdict for defendant made at the close of plaintiff's evidence is not waived, where defendant does not thereafter introduce any evidence.¹¹ As a general rule, the error in ruling on his motion is waived where, after denial of his motion for a verdict at the close of plaintiff's case, defendant introduces evidence,¹² at

Resting

(1) Error in the denial of a motion for a directed verdict is not waived where defendant does not thereafter introduce any evidence, and a formal announcement that he rests his case is not necessary—Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Carlisle, Ohio, 152 F. 933, 82 C.C.A. 81.

(2) If defendant intended to stand by motion for directed verdict at close of plaintiff's case, he should have so informed court and should have refused to participate further in trial instead of merely resting after denial of motion—Carson v. Weston Hotel Corp., 115 N.E.2d 800, 351 Ill.App. 523.

Failure to renew motion after proof by codeffendant

(1) Defendant's failure to renew motion for directed verdict at conclusion of all proof was not a waiver of motion, where defendant, prior to introduction of codeffendant's testimony, stated that defendant would stand on motion and would offer no evidence and would not be bound by evidence offered by codeffendant—Pikeville Fuel Co. v. Marsh, 232 S.W.2d 789, 34 Tenn.App. 82.

(2) Trial judge's statement, before submitting case to jury, that defendant city relied on its motion for a directed verdict made at end of plaintiff's proof, put defendant city in same position it would have been in, had it renewed its motion at the end of all the evidence, where defendant had introduced no evidence to effect a waiver of the former motion, and evidence introduced by codeffend-

Evidence introduced after motion granted
 Where defendant introduced evidence on subject matter of count of complaint on which verdict had been directed for defendant at close of plaintiff's case and jury was instructed thereon, such count was reinstated and appellate court would deal with defendant's appeal as though verdict had not been directed on such count, even though plaintiff did not cross-appeal.—Kamienksi v. Bluebird Air Service, 53 N.E.2d 131, 321 Ill.App. 340, error dismissed 59 N.E.2d 853, 380 Ill. 462.

Subsequent presentation of evidence by plaintiff

(1) Any error in overruling plaintiff's motion for judgment at close of testimony of plaintiff and defendants was waived by plaintiff's subsequent introduction of rebuttal testimony.—Cullender v. Doyal, 105 P.2d 326, 44 N.M. 491—Cullender v. Doyal, 102 P.2d 1115, 44 N.M. 378.

(2) Where defendant at conclusion of defendant's case moved for a directed verdict, and the court reserved decision on such motions, and thereafter, plaintiff introduced additional testimony, and defendant failed to renew his motion for directed verdict, and issues were submitted to jury, defendant, not having renewed his motions at close of all the evidence, failed to preserve his right to move for such relief after the verdict had been received, even though plaintiff had failed to establish a prima facie case.—Buxhoeveden v. Estonian State Bank, 112 N.Y.S.2d 785, 279 App.Div. 1089, reargument denied 113 N.Y.S.2d 773, 280 App Div 806.

Reopening of case

Where a motion for a directed verdict, made after the case is closed, is denied, and the case is reopened, on witness being called on each side, and a few unimportant questions asked, whereupon the court proceeds to charge, defendant's failure to renew supplies the deficiency in plaintiff's proofs.¹⁴ Defendant, by introducing evidence after his motion for a directed verdict is denied takes the chance that his evidence will aid plaintiff's case,¹⁵ but he is not thereby barred from asking for a directed verdict on all of the evidence,¹⁶ or from insisting that on all of the evidence plaintiff is not entitled to a submission of the case to the jury.¹⁷ However, plaintiff's right to a submission of his case is to be determined from all of the evidence regardless of who introduced it.¹⁸ While it has been indicated that where defendant renews his motion for a directed verdict at the close of the case, it is to be determined as of the time the original motion was made,¹⁹ it is generally held that where the motion is renewed at the close of the case, it is to be determined on all of the evidence, and not alone on the evidence at the time the original motion was made.²⁰ In at least one jurisdiction, the rule that defendant, by introducing evidence after his motion for a directed verdict is denied, thereby waives error in the denial of his motion has been abrogated by statute.²¹

Motions by both parties for direction of verdict.
Error in sustaining a motion to direct a verdict is not waived because the party against whom it is directed also moved for a direction in his favor.²²

Motion for new trial. A motion for a new trial has been held to be a waiver of an exception to a refusal to direct a verdict where the new trial is sought on the same grounds.²³ A motion for a peremptory instruction is not waived by the reliance on other matters in a motion for new trial.²⁴

§ 669. Instructions to Jury

Waiver of error as to instructions given by subsequent affirmative acts or statements is discussed infra § 670, and waiver of error in failure or refusal to give instructions, infra § 671. The cure of error in instructions by other instructions is considered supra §§ 441-448.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 670. — Instructions Given

Error in instructions to the jury may be waived by subsequent acts or statements of the complaining party.

Error in instructions to the jury may be expressly or impliedly waived by subsequent affirmative acts or statements of the complaining party²⁵ or may be

New motion or renewal of motion

(1) A defendant who moves for directed verdict at close of plaintiff's case must introduce no evidence if he desires to waive the point, and if he puts in evidence must make a second motion for directed verdict, and cannot merely renew his previous motion.—Popadowski v. Bergaman, 26 N.E.2d 722, 304 Ill.App. 422.

(2) Where defendant put in evidence after making motion for directed verdict at close of plaintiff's case, the motion was out of the case for all time and could not be reserved and it could not be renewed.—Goldberg v. Capitol Freight Lines, 41 N.E.2d 302, 314 Ill.App. 347, affirmed 47 N.E.2d 67, 382 Ill. 283.

(3) Error of trial court in not directing verdict for defendant, where the evidence was insufficient to support plaintiff's cause of action, was not waived by offering testimony after the court refused to rule on the motion for a directed verdict, where such motion was again renewed at the close of all the evidence.—Blair v. Cure or waiver by:
Failure to object or except see supra § 425.

Prior acts or omissions see supra § 414.

Effect of waiver

Waiver of error in giving instruction on law of case where case was submitted on special issues rendered cured or corrected by the acts or statements of the court;²⁶ and whether or not there is a waiver or cure of the error depends on the circumstances of the particular case.²⁷ Where plaintiff expressly approves a charge, he waives error, if any, in another paragraph to the same effect, but in different language,²⁸ and error in an instruction to the jury is waived by asking for a modification thereof which does not cure the error.²⁹ Where defendant, not standing on his objection to a charge, undertakes at the request of the court to prepare special charges on an issue, some of which were given by the court, he cannot complain that they were not full and specific.³⁰ It has been held that a party waives his objection to an instruction by asking and receiving counter instructions involving the same error;³¹ but where an exception to an erroneous instruction is overruled, the excepting party does not waive the exception by adapting himself to the view of the court and attempting, by requests for a modification of such view, to soften as far as possible the emphasis of the instruction given,³² and where plaintiff, after the refusal of his request for an instruction that the jury should disregard an alleged compromise, yields to the ruling of the court and offers instructions in which the question of compromise is submitted to the jury, he does not thereby waive his right to object to the action of the court in giving instructions for defendant submitting such question.³³ A request for instructions covering matters other than the instruction objected to is not a waiver of the objection.³⁴ Error in an instruction permitting the jury to consider elements of damages not alleged in the petition is not cured by an amendment of the petition after verdict alleging such damages.³⁵

§ 671. — Failure or Refusal to Instruct

Error in failing or refusing to give instructions may subsequently be cured or waived.

Error in failing or refusing to give instructions may subsequently be waived or cured.³⁶ Thus, error in refusing to give requested instructions is cured where the court subsequently gives them of its own motion,³⁷ or recalls the jury shortly after they have retired for consultation, and submits such instructions to them.³⁸ Where a requested instruction is properly refused, but afterward given with the consent of the opposite party, the party making the request cannot complain.³⁹ So, where counsel has an opportunity to have the jury recalled, and his requests charged, but does not avail himself of such

Introduction of evidence

Where switchman brought action under Federal Employers' Liability Act against railroad for injuries sustained when switchman was knocked from boxcar by overhanging building canopy, and instruction on behalf of switchman exceeded pleadings by presenting issue of necessity of warning of presence of canopy by artificial illumination thereof, fact that railroad had joined in introduction of evidence as to extent of illumination in yards could not be construed as consent that issue presented by instruction be tried as ground of negligence as though specifically pleaded.—Spunkle v. Thompson, Mo., 243 S.W.2d 510.

Satisfaction with instruction

Where defendant objected and excepted to four instructions given by the court, and asked for time to prepare other instructions, but the court declined to give any time, a recital in the bill of exceptions that the court called the attention of the defendant's counsel to the second instruction, and he agreed that it was the law on that issue, and expressed himself as satisfied with the instruction, but did not state that he consented thereto, does not show that he waived his right to complain of any error in the instructions.—*Lang v. offer, he must be deemed to waive whatever right he has with respect thereto.⁴⁰ Failure to instruct with respect to an issue is waived where with the consent of counsel the case is submitted solely on another issue.⁴¹ Exceptions to refusals of requests to charge are waived by a subsequent consent that particular questions be submitted to the jury and that after verdict on such questions the cause be decided by the court.⁴² An exception to the refusal to give an instruction is not waived by proceeding with the trial after such refusal.⁴³

§ 672. Conduct and Deliberations of Jury

Misconduct of the jury may be waived.

Misconduct of the jury may be waived.⁴⁴ Waiver of a juror's disqualification or incompetency is not a waiver of the juror's subsequent misconduct.⁴⁵ A party has been held not to waive the right to claim jury misconduct by moving for judgment on the verdict and judgment non obstante veredicto.⁴⁶ It has been held that error in returning a compromise verdict is one which no waiver by defendant can cure, where such compromise represents not a divergence as to the amount, but differing views as to defendant's liability.⁴⁷

§ 673. Verdict and Findings

Objections relating to the verdict or findings of the jury or the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court may be waived.

Objections relating to the verdict or findings of a jury,⁴⁸ or the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court,⁴⁹ may ordinarily be waived or cured by some subsequent affirmative act of the objecting party or of the court. The submission of special issues to a jury in an equity suit, if error, is cured by the action of the court in adopting the jury's findings as those of the court.⁵⁰ It has been held that error in submitting special issues to the jury cannot be cured by ignoring the answers thereto, since the verdict must stand or fall as a whole.⁵¹ A fatal conflict in the answers to special issues cannot be waived by the parties.⁵² Where a verdict is returned against an employer and in favor of an employee in an action against both for the employee's tort, the inconsistency in the verdict cannot be cured by the employee's consent that a verdict be directed against him.⁵³

Coercion

Where, at time defendant excepted to refusal to give requested instructions, court stated that, if counsel insisted on such exceptions, court was inclined to call jury back and give plaintiff's proposed instruction, and that, if counsel would waive exception court on its own responsibility would refuse plaintiff's proposed instruction counsel's waiver of exceptions to requested instructions was not brought about by coercion so as to entitle defendant to claim error based on failure to give such requested instructions.—Wiggins v. Failure to present matter to court until after verdict

If plaintiffs considered the fact that during the trial a juror talked to a witness for the defendant and to an insurance man for company which allegedly carried insurance on defendant's truck prejudicial, plaintiffs should have presented the matter to the trial court prior to submission of case to jury, and where they sought a verdict without presenting the matter to the trial court, they thereby waived their claim of misconduct.—Goetz v. Burgess, supra.

Motion for new trial

A party may move for new trial after court has definitely announced its decision and made it a matter of record, although findings of fact and conclusions of law have not been filed, and by making the motion party waives objection that findings and conclusions have not been filed.—Application of Mitchell, 13 N.W.2d 20, 216 Minn. 368.

TRIANTHRIMIDE. Also referred to as "dianthraquinonylaminoanthraquinone" and as a "dianthraquinonyl-diamino-anthraquinone compound." There are different trianthrimides, depending on the position of the linkage of the amino groups, which may be in alpha or beta positions on the end anthraquinones and also on the middle anthraquinone.¹

As a noun, and in ordinary language, "tributary" means a stream running into another stream;⁴ a running natural stream which empties into another stream;⁵ a stream feeding a larger stream;⁶ all streams flowing directly or indirectly into a river;⁷ a river or lake or other similar body immediately connected with another body of water of larger size.⁸ In its derived sense "tributary" means that which contributes to.⁹

The adjective "tributary" is defined as meaning paying or yielding tribute;¹⁰ taxed or assessed by tribute;¹¹ and in this sense it has been distinguished from "abutting" see 1 C.J.S. p 407 note 31, and "contiguous" see 17 C.J.S. p 180 note 15.

TRICHINA; TRICHINOSIS. The trichina, also called "trichina spiralis,"¹² is a parasitic worm¹³ about one and four-tenths of a millimeter long.¹⁴ Trichinae are not infrequently found in pork,¹⁵ and also in rats, dogs, polecats, and monkeys.¹⁶

Trichinae cause the disease known as "trichinosis."¹⁷ Trichinae mate and propagate in the body,¹⁸ and produce muscular swelling, pain, and fever.¹⁹ Trichinosis may be a serious disease, and may be both painful and disabling, and it may have permanent effects of varying degrees of intensity.²⁰ The symptoms of the disease are not constant, and in light cases the various stages of the disease are not clear.²¹

Trichinae cannot be seen with the naked eye,²² and there is no inspection of a product which can determine the presence or absence of trichinae without destroying the product.²³ There are several known methods of killing trichinae in meat which is intended for human consumption.²⁴ If the meat is exposed to a temperature of 137 degrees Fahrenheit the trichinae are destroyed,²⁵ and they are also destroyed if the meat is stored for a period of twenty days at a temperature which does not exceed five degrees above zero.²⁶

Liability may arise where meat infested with trichinae is sold for human consumption, the subject being treated in Food § 59 and Sales §§ 305, 331.

TRIM. In one sense the word "trim" means to adjust, dispose, regulate, or set in order;⁴² and in another sense it means to decorate or embellish with ornaments.⁴³

As used with reference to trees, "trim" means to reduce to a neat or orderly state, as by clipping, paring, pruning, lopping, or otherwise removing the superfluous or disfiguring parts,⁴⁴ but not to destroy or remove them.⁴⁵

Trimming. As a verbal noun, "trimming" is defined as that which serves to trim, make complete, ornament, or the like; usually in the plural, as, trimmings for a hat.⁴⁶

As the present participle of the verb "to trim" the word "trimming" is defined in several senses. In connection with a ship's cargo when loading, "trimming" is stowing it and securing it for the voyage;⁴⁷ and when used with reference to loading or unloading of canalboats at grain elevators "trimming" is shoveling the grain from one place to another and is work performed by longshoremen with hand scoops or shovels, on the vessel unloading or receiving the grain;⁴⁸ and, when, in discharging coal from storage bins having discharge chutes at the bottom, the coal ceases to flow freely from the chute, resort is had to the process of "trimming" which consists in shoveling the coal closer to the place of discharge.⁴⁹

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF CONVERSION IN GENERAL

§ 3. In General

The essence of conversion is not the acquisition of property by the wrongdoer, but a wrongful deprivation of it to the owner, whether temporary or permanent; in consequence it is of no importance that the defendant derived no benefit from his act.

In order to constitute a conversion there must be either some repudiation of the owner's right,¹⁵ or some exercise of dominion over it inconsistent with such right,¹⁶ or some act done which has the effect of destroying or changing its character,¹⁷ or, as otherwise expressed, there must be a wrongful taking or a wrongful detention, or an illegal assumption of ownership, or an illegal user or misuser.¹⁸ Conversions, it has been said, are of two classes, where possession is originally wrongful,¹⁹ and where possession originally rightful becomes wrongful by wrongful detention.²⁰

Mere words, that is, declarations, will not, in and of themselves alone, amount to a conversion; it must be accomplished by acts.²¹ Furthermore, the acts alleged to constitute a conversion must be positive and tortious.²² An act constituting a conversion need not be accompanied by force or violence.²³ Mere nonfeasance or neglect of some legal duty does not amount to conversion and will not support an action of trover,²⁴ although it may con-

§ 5. Want of Consent of Owner

Nonconsent to the possession and disposition of the property by the defendant is indispensable to a conversion.

In order to constitute conversion, nonconsent to the possession and disposition of the property by defendant is indispensable.²⁸ However, the property need not have come wrongfully into the possession of the party making the conversion.²⁹ Except where it is obtained by duress,³⁰ or from one lacking capacity to consent,³¹ or is obtained,³² or acted on,³³ fraudulently, if the owner expressly or impliedly assents to or ratifies the taking, use, or disposition of his property, he cannot recover as for a conversion thereof;³⁴ and this is true although defendant exceeded the power given him.³⁵

one other than the owner nor its asportation³⁷ is an essential element of conversion. It constitutes conversion if the wrongdoer exercises dominion over the property in exclusion of, or in defiance of, the owner's right.³⁸

§ 7. Intent

Although an intent to do an act amounting to a conversion, together with some positive act, is necessary to constitute a conversion, it is very generally held that it is not essential to a conversion that the motive or intent with which the act is done be wrongful.

While an intent to do some act amounting to a conversion is necessary,³⁹ mere intention to convert property, without more, is not enough to constitute a conversion, but the intent must be accompanied by some positive act.⁴⁰ It is the act of conversion itself that gives a right of action, and not the intent to convert.⁴¹ While an intent to convert consummated by some positive act, is necessary to constitute conversion, it is very generally held that it is not essential to conversion that the motive or intent with which the act was committed should be wrongful,⁴² or willful or corrupt,⁴³ although, as in actions for damages for torts generally, discussed in Damages § 121, factors of this character may be taken into consideration in determining whether exemplary damages shall be allowed.⁴⁴

It is sufficient if the owner has been deprived of his property by the act of another assuming an unauthorized dominion and control over it.⁴⁵ It is the effect of the act which constitutes the conversion.⁴⁶ In consequence, subject to some limitations discussed infra §§ 8, 10, it has very generally been held that the question of good faith,⁴⁷ and the additional questions or elements of motive,⁴⁸ knowledge or ignorance,⁴⁹ or care or negligence,⁵⁰ are not involved in actions for conversion.

§ 8. — Ignorance of Owner's Rights or Title

The general rule is that one who exercises unauthorized acts of dominion over the property of another, in exclusion or denial of his rights or inconsistent therewith, is guilty of conversion although he acted in good faith and in ignorance of the rights or title of the owner.

The general rule is that one who exercises unauthorized acts of dominion over the property of another, in exclusion or denial of his rights or inconsistent therewith, is guilty of conversion although he acted in good faith and in ignorance of the rights or title of the owner.⁵¹ The state of his knowledge with respect to the rights of such owner is of no importance, and cannot in any respect affect the case.⁵² Circumstances may exist, however, by virtue of which it is the duty of a party to give notice, either actual or constructive, of his ownership or right to possession, and in this event the general rule does not apply.⁵³ Likewise, the rule does not apply to one who, in good faith and without notice of the owner's rights, received in payment of a debt the proceeds of a sale of the property by the party who converted it.⁵⁴

§ 9. — Delivery by Mistake to Person Other than Owner

Ordinarily, a delivery of property or the proceeds of a sale thereof by mistake to a person other than the owner, whereby it is lost to the latter, constitutes a conversion.

Ordinarily, a delivery of property or the proceeds of a sale thereof by mistake to a person other than the owner, whereby it is lost to the latter, constitutes a conversion.⁵⁵ However, where the assignee of a claim recovers judgment thereon and has a chattel mortgage securing the debt foreclosed, he is not entitled to hold the assignor as for conversion, because he, by mistake, receipted the claim and delivered the evidence thereof to the debtor instead of to the assignee, since the court has treated the delivery as a mistake and adjusted the rights of the parties as if no such delivery had occurred.⁵⁶

Holding of debtor's property

Conversion was committed in good faith under a mistaken belief in a right to the property, where convertor, under sincere and honest belief that he was entitled to do so, held debtor's property because of unpaid indebtedness—Stark v. Stark, 276 N.W. 820, 201 Minn. 491

The general rule is well settled that one who takes and disposes of the goods of another is guilty of a conversion thereof, although he did so under an honest but mistaken belief that the goods were his own.⁵⁷ However, the rule does not apply where the mistake is mutual and where the owner's error is solely responsible for the taking and use of the property by defendant.⁵⁸

III. PROPERTY SUBJECT OF CONVERSION

§ 11. In General

An action of trover lies only for the conversion of tangible personal property, or tangible evidence of title to intangible or real property.

An action of trover lies only for the conversion of personal chattels.⁵⁹ Such action does not lie for a wrongful deprivation of,⁶⁰ or for injuries to,⁶¹ land or other real property. Generally every species of personal property which is the subject of private ownership is the subject of conversion,⁶² if of a tangible nature,⁶³ or if it is tangible evidence of title to intangible or real property.⁶⁴

§ 12. Written Instruments Generally

Generally speaking, all valuable written instruments may be the subjects of conversion.

Generally speaking, all valuable written instruments may be the subjects of conversion.⁶⁵ It has been so held in respect of county warrants,⁶⁶ instruments giving the right to deliver or call for stock,⁶⁷ insurance policies,⁶⁸ liquor licenses which under the ordinances granting them are transferable,⁶⁹ a liquor tax certificate,⁷⁰ and a bank deposit book.⁷¹

§ 13. Negotiable Instruments

Negotiable instruments are subjects of conversion.

Moskino Stores, 2 So.2d 449, 241 Ala. 346.

ticles of personal property.⁷² So it has been uniformly held that promissory notes are a subject of conversion,⁷³ as are also bills of exchange,⁷⁴ drafts,⁷⁵ and checks,⁷⁶ because by their seizure and their transfer to bona fide holders for value the owner may lose the thing in action which they represent.⁷⁷

Payment or discharge as affecting right of action
While a rule to the contrary obtains in some jurisdictions,⁷⁸ it has elsewhere been held that payment or other discharge of a note is not a bar to an action for conversion brought by the maker against the payee or holder who refuses to surrender it,⁷⁹ even though the fact of payment is denied.⁸⁰ However, trover will not lie for the conversion of a note on which judgment has been rendered.⁸¹

§ 14. Bonds

Bonds are subjects of conversion.

It has very generally been held that bonds of all descriptions are subjects of conversion and that trover may be maintained for conversion thereof.⁸² It has been so held in respect of federal, state, municipal, and corporation bonds,⁸³ bonds for delivery of property,⁸⁴ bonds given for the dissolution of attachments,⁸⁵ and bonds conditioned for the payment of money secured by mortgage.⁸⁶

§ 15. Muniments of Title

Trover may be maintained for the conversion of muniments of title to tangible property, both real and personal.

Trover may be maintained for the wrongful conversion of muniments of title to tangible property, such as title deeds to real estate,⁸⁷ bonds for title,⁸⁸ mortgages,⁸⁹ a certificate issued by the state entitling the holder to receive a deed of lands on making specified payments,⁹⁰ land scrip,⁹¹ a contract for the sale of land,⁹² or instruments evidencing title to personalty,⁹³ such as a bill of lading,⁹⁴ or certificates of corporate stock, considered infra § 16. It has been held, however, that, where there is a dispute about the delivery of a title deed involving a determination of the title to the land conveyed by it, trover will not lie for the conversion of the deed.⁹⁵

§ 16. Corporate Stock and Certificates

Certificates of stock, as well as shares of stock, may be the subjects of conversion.

Conversion of corporate stock by refusal to transfer on books of corporation see Corporations § 438.

Effect

The conversion of a stock certificate constitutes conversion of the

although no use was or can be made of the certificate because it has not been indorsed.⁹⁷ Al though there is some authority to the contrary,⁹⁸ particularly at common law,⁹⁹ it has been held, sometimes by virtue of statute,¹ that an action of trover will lie for the conversion of shares of stock in corporations;² and this is true even though the owner's possession of the certificate evidencing his title has not been disturbed,³ but the mere withholding of an undorsed stock certificate cannot amount to a conversion of the stock itself.⁴

§ 17. Copies of Accounts and Account Books

A book of accounts may be the subject of conversion.

There can be a conversion of a book of accounts,⁵ and trover lies for the conversion of an account audited and allowed, and delivered to the debtor, who paid it in part, but refused to pay the balance on demand, or to return the account to the owner.⁶ A debtor who has made copies of his creditor's account against him may, if the creditor obtain possession of such copies, and refuse to redeliver them to the debtor, maintain trover therefor against the creditor.⁷ The seizure of books of account and the service of notice on the debtors of the husband, who has assigned his claims against them to his wife, by a sheriff acting under a warrant of attachment against the husband, do not amount to a conversion of the accounts.⁸

§ 18. Certificate of Membership in Social Club

An untransferred certificate of membership in a social club is not the subject of an action of trover.

Where membership certificates in a social club are issued to one in payment for services in organizing and securing members, they cannot, until transferred by him, be considered as representing membership, and are not subject to an action of trover.⁹

§ 19. Records

In general, trover will not lie for a public record; however, this rule must be understood as applying to individuals who suppose themselves interested in the preservation of the record, but not to a person having the official custody of it.

In general, trover will not lie for a public record because it is not private property.¹⁰ It has been said, however, that the rule must be understood as extending to individuals, who suppose themselves interested in the preservation of the record, but not to a person having the official custody of it,¹¹ and it has been held that the rule should be taken as being predicated of the record strictly so-called, which is made and preserved by public authority, and not of such papers as have relation to the record, but are not parcel of it.¹² Accordingly it has been held that trover may be brought for the conversion of an execution,¹³ even though the execution may have expired previous to the commencement of the action.¹⁴

§ 20. Judgments

Since judgments are not private property, it is generally held, although there is authority to the contrary, that such judgments, whether or not of a court of record, cannot be the subject of an action of trover.

In accordance with the principle that trover will not lie for a public record because it is not private property, discussed supra § 19, it has been held that judgments of courts of record are not private property for which an action of trover will lie.¹⁵ It has also been held that judgments of a justice of the peace, although not records, are quasi records,

§ 21. Mail Matter

Mail matter is a subject of conversion.

Mail matter is a subject of conversion, and a wrongful detention of mail matter by a postmaster will render him liable to an action for trover.¹⁸

§ 22. Leasehold Estates

Leasehold estates are not subjects of conversion.

Leasehold estates are not subjects of conversion,¹⁹ the reasons assigned being that they are not "personal chattels,"²⁰ and are not tangible property.²¹

§ 23. Money

Money may be the subject of conversion, but trover will not lie to enforce a mere obligation to pay money.

Money of any kind is as much the subject of conversion as any other kind of personal chattels,²² and trover will lie whenever plaintiff's money has come into defendant's possession, and has been converted by him, without any assent on plaintiff's part, express or implied, that the relation of debtor and creditor should thereby arise.²³ However, money is a subject of conversion only when it is capable of being identified, and described as a specific chattel,²⁴ although identification as far as is needful to determine the rights of the parties will be sufficient.²⁵ It is not necessary for purposes of identification that money should be specifically earmarked.²⁶

In other words, trover lies for the conversion of determinate sums, although the specific coin and bills are not identified.²⁷ There can be, however, no conversion of money, unless there was an obligation on the part of defendant to deliver specific money to plaintiff,²⁸ or unless the money was wrongfully received by defendant.²⁹ Trover does not lie to enforce a mere obligation to pay money,³⁰ or for money had and received for payment of a debt.³¹ On the other hand, where defendant is under an obligation to deliver specific money to plaintiff, and fails or refuses to do so,³² or when wrongful possession thereof has been obtained by defendant,³³ there is a conversion for which trover lies.

§ 24. Earth, Sand, and Gravel

Earth, sand, or gravel, while remaining in its original bed is a part of the realty and as such cannot be a subject of conversion; but where it has been dug up by the owner, or wrongfully severed, it becomes personally for the conversion of which an action will lie.

Conversion of ore see Mines and

has been severed from the soil, gathered up and secured for use elsewhere,³⁵ or where it has been wrongfully severed and removed,³⁶ it becomes personally for the conversion of which an action will lie. It has been held, however, that where, by statute, a city which has condemned land as a gravel and clay pit is entitled to take therefrom "earth and gravel" for street construction or repair, it may take any earth, gravel, or stones suitable for the purposes, and capable of being dug out of the ground and removed by ordinary excavation, and an action of trover does not lie for removal of stones as well as earth and gravel.³⁷ Where plaintiff purchases top soil and strips it from the land, leaving it thereon in piles until it can be removed, the piles of dirt are personally for which suit for conversion may be maintained.³⁸

§ 25. Manure

Manure, when severed from the soil, gathered up, and secured for use elsewhere, becomes a personal chattel, and as such is a subject of conversion.

According to the prevailing view, manure made in the course of husbandry on a farm is real property, at least if it is the produce of the land, as considered in Property § 7 c, but like earth, sand, or gravel, discussed supra § 24, when severed from the soil, gathered up, and secured for use elsewhere, it becomes a personal chattel, and as such is a subject of conversion.³⁹

§ 26. Fixtures

Whether or not fixtures are the subject of conversion is considered in Fixtures § 60.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 27. Buildings and Building Materials

All kinds of buildings which are personal property are subject to conversion, and the owner or possessor of land who wrongfully prevents their removal may be compelled to respond in trover for their value.

All kinds of building which are personal property, as considered in Fixtures § 11, are subject to conversion, and the owner or possessor of the land who wrongfully prevents their removal may be compelled to respond in trover for their value.⁴⁰ However, the owner of a building cannot at the same time treat it as realty and personally, and if he rents the house to a tenant, he necessarily rents it as a tenement, to stand where it was, and cannot maintain an action of trover therefor.⁴¹

Material out of which house built. Trover will lie for the material out of which a house was built, if the house was subject to conversion at the time it was wrecked,⁴² but not otherwise.⁴³

§ 28. Timber, Crops, Fruit, and Turpentine

Timber, crops, fruit, and turpentine are personal property and may be the subject of conversion.

The unauthorized cutting and removal of standing trees from the land of another constitutes a conversion for which an action of trover will lie.⁴⁴ While trees standing on land are real estate, as considered in Property § 7 c, they become personal property as soon as they are severed from the soil,⁴⁵ but the title thereto remains unchanged,⁴⁶ and a wrongful assumption of dominion over them after severance constitutes a conversion.⁴⁷ It has been held, however, that, where trees were cut from the owner's land, and, without the knowledge or procurement of defendant, were converted into timber and incorporated into fences and a building on his property, the trees so cut lost their character as personal property and became a fixture or part of the realty, and not subject to an action of trover.⁴⁸

Crops. The severing and removal of growing crops, such as grain, hay, cotton, and the like, constitutes a conversion for which the owner may maintain an action of trover.⁴⁹ It has been held that

Fully matured corn may be subject of conversion like any other person-

the severing of crops alone without removing them, or attempting to do so, and without preventing the owner from removing them, amounts to a conversion,⁵⁰ and in jurisdictions where crops are considered personal property, severance or removal of growing crops is not necessary in order to constitute a conversion, but it will be sufficient that defendant exercise some act of dominion over the property, such as keeping the owner out of possession⁵¹ or refusing to allow him to remove the property.⁵² Crops which are in an immature state and could not profitably be severed from the soil are not subject to conversion.⁵³

Fruits. Matured fruits, whether on the tree or on the ground, are fructus industriales properly the basis of an action of trover.⁵⁴

Turpentine. Crude turpentine collected in cavities made, or boxes cut, in the trees which supply it is personal property for which trover may be maintained.⁵⁵

§ 29. Materials Used in Repair of Chattel

Materials used in the repair of a chattel ordinarily become part of it and are incapable of conversion.

Ordinarily, materials used in the repair of a chattel become a part of it and are therefore incapable of conversion;⁵⁶ but the rule is otherwise when repairs are made under a stipulation that title to the parts added to the chattel shall not pass until they are paid for.⁵⁷

§ 30. Animals

Domestic animals, and wild animals which have been tamed, are subjects of conversion.

Domestic animals are property, and as such are subjects of conversion.⁵⁸ So trover is maintainable for wild animals which have been tamed and which have strayed away without gaining their natural liberty,⁵⁹ but not for wild animals which were not in the possession of plaintiff and which have no earmarks of ownership.⁶⁰

§ 31. Property in Custody of Law

An action in trover will lie for the conversion of property in the custody of the law.

Although property of which conversion is alleged is in the custody of a chancery court, an action for its conversion may be brought in a law court, since it does not affect the possession of the property or interfere with its custody.⁶¹

§ 32. Effect of Change in Form of Property

As long as property may be identified, trover may be maintained for its conversion, although its form may have been in a large measure or entirely changed.

As long as property may be identified, trover may be maintained for its conversion, although its form may have been in a large measure or entirely changed,⁶² as, for instance, where wood has been converted and made into charcoal,⁶³ or trees into lumber,⁶⁴ or saw logs,⁶⁵ or staves,⁶⁶ or into boards or shingles.⁶⁷

§ 33. Property of No Value

Trover cannot be maintained for the conversion of any kind of personal property unless it is shown that it was of some value.

IV. ACTS CONSTITUTING CONVERSION AND LIABILITY THEREFOR

§ 34. In General

Any unauthorized act which deprives an owner of his property permanently, or for an indefinite time, is a conversion.

Any unauthorized act which deprives an owner of his property permanently, or for an indefinite time, is a conversion.⁶⁹ Acts rightfully done do not constitute a conversion.⁷⁰ Acts of conversion have been classified as a taking from the owner without his consent, an unwarranted assumption of ownership, an illegal use or abuse of the chattel, and a wrongful detention after demand.⁷¹

§ 35. Destruction of, or Injury to, Property

The destruction of goods or personalty by a positive and tortious act is a conversion, as is also the serious maltreatment of a chattel.

The destruction of goods or personalty by a positive and tortious act is a conversion,⁷² as is also the serious maltreatment of a chattel.⁷³ However, the destruction or damaging of property is not, in and of itself, a conversion;⁷⁴ it must be tortious;⁷⁵ and it will not be regarded as tortious when it is necessary for the protection either of defendant or his property.⁷⁶ It is occasioned by act of public authorities,⁷⁷ or it results from accident.⁷⁸ Also, the destruction or loss of property is not a conversion where it is not the result of a positive act, as where it is the result of negligence,⁷⁹ or omission to act.⁸⁰

Destruction of crops by livestock. The value of crops eaten or destroyed by livestock cannot be recovered in trover,⁸¹ even though defendant knew that his stock were habituated to such depredations.⁸²

Canceling certificate of membership in board of trade is a conversion of such certificate.⁸³

Change of lien of mortgage

Where trust company from which plaintiff purchased undivided shares in two mortgages, and which was acting as plaintiff's agent in collecting principal and interest, made loan secured by another mortgage on same property, and thereafter entered into agreement with its debtor consolidating the three mortgages into one first mortgage, trust company, by thus changing lien of mortgages in which plaintiff held an interest, was guilty of conversion.—Mendelson v. Boettger, 12 N.Y.S.2d 671, 257 App.Div. 167, affirmed 23 N.E.2d 554, 281 N.Y. 747.

Refusal to exchange shares of stock

(1) Where bank was made transfer agent for block shares of corporation and agent for conversion of shares into block shares, but refused to comply with plaintiff's demand to transfer his shares to block shares prior to communicating with corporation, bank was not liable for conversion, even if delay or refusal was wrongful, where bank was not a party to agreement with stock exchange on the mechanics of selling the shares thereon.—Mears v. Crocker First Nat. Bank of San Francisco, 218 P.2d 91, 97 Cal.App.2d 482.

(2) Where pursuant to agreement of a company, its transfer agent and stock exchange, common shares of company could not be traded in unless converted into blocks of 20 shares each, transfer agent was required on proper demand to make necessary conversion and was liable as for a conversion when it wrongfully refused to do so.—Mears v. versely, in order to constitute conversion there must be some unauthorized and unlawful assumption and exercise of control, dominion, or ownership by defendant over the personal property involved in defiance or exclusion of plaintiff's rights.⁸⁷ Verbal assertions of ownership or right of possession do not amount to a conversion,⁸⁸ unless they are made by a person in possession of the property, as considered infra § 37, or are uttered in proximity to the property, in a manner indicating a determination to control it, and coupled with an apparent ability to do so.⁸⁹ Merely forbidding an officer to sell property on execution against another person is not a conversion.⁹⁰

Filing and assignment of mechanic's lien

The mere filing and assignment of purported mechanic's lien on caterpillar tractor, by one who did not have a lien on the tractor, did not constitute such dominion over the tractor as to entitle the owner to maintain an action for wrongful conversion against the one filing and assigning the lien—*Hitchstein v. One may be compelled by threats or even by physical coercion to forego full exercise of his own dominion as owner of property yet if the wrongful act falls short of a disseisin, thereof, the wrongdoer is not guilty of conversion—Martin v. Sikes, 229 P 2d 546, 38 Wash 2d 274.

Permitting removal of goods conditionally sold

Protection of property subject to lien

An act which is done to preserve and protect property in order that it may remain subject to lien and which is equally beneficial to those having subordinate rights and not antagonistic thereto, does not constitute a wrongful conversion—*Enfield v. the assumption and exercise of dominion by one person over the personal property of another person may constitute a conversion regardless of whether or not any actual interference with the property itself is involved.⁹³

§ 37. — Possession by Defendant

A person cannot be charged with conversion of goods unless he had an actual or constructive possession of them at the time of the conversion alleged.

Regardless of whether he came into possession of the property lawfully⁹⁴ or unlawfully,⁹⁵ a person in possession of the personal property of another is guilty of conversion where he makes an unfounded claim or assertion of ownership or title thereto,⁹⁶ or treats or deals with the property as owner.⁹⁷ A person cannot be charged with a conversion of goods unless he had an actual or constructive possession of them at the time of the conversion alleged.⁹⁸

notwithstanding he may have forcibly interposed obstacles in order to prevent the owner from obtaining the possession sought.⁹⁹ It is not necessary that his possession shall have continued until the commencement of the action.¹ Where a person exercised dominion over the property to the exclusion of, and in defiance of, the owner's right, it is not necessary that he shall have actually taken or had manual or physical possession of the property.²

§ 39. Taking or Reception of Property

An illegal, wrongful, or unauthorized taking of chattels out of the possession of the owner with intent to appropriate them to the taker's use is a conversion, but there is no conversion where a person takes property rightfully or takes or receives only that to which he is entitled.

An illegal,⁵ wrongful,⁶ or unauthorized⁷ taking of chattels out of the possession of the owner with intent to appropriate them to the taker's use⁸ is a conversion. In order that the wrongful taking of possession may constitute conversion it is not necessary that the taker assert absolute ownership;⁹ it is sufficient if the taking is wrongful or unauthorized and under a claim of right inconsistent with the owner's right of possession,¹⁰ or with an intent to exercise an ownership inconsistent with the real owner's right of possession.¹¹

On the other hand there is no conversion where a person takes property rightfully¹² or takes or receives only that to which he is entitled;¹³ and where the ownership of property is in dispute it is not an unlawful conversion to induce the other party by means of an affidavit of ownership to surrender possession thereof.¹⁴ Merely taking pos-own use of any of the substantial and essential parts of an entire chattel, such conversion will, if chattel is a complicated mechanism constructed to perform certain work, amount to a "conversion" of the whole, if the removal of such parts so impairs the chattel as to destroy its character as a whole and defeat its intended use—Klam v. (2) One who steals from an infant or aids the thief to dispose of the stolen property does so at his own peril.—Hayward v. Edwards, 4 N.Y. 32 699, 167 Misc. 694.

Where a person with notice of another's claim to property deliberately chooses not to avail himself of orderly processes of law in determining validity of the asserted rights and chooses to substitute himself as sole arbiter of the law and facts and renders decision in his own self-interest, and thereafter takes the property, he acts at his peril, and if his conclusions are erroneous, he alone must bear the consequences of his deliberate usurpation of authority.—Cage Bros. v. Collection of proceeds of insurance policies

Mother who, as beneficiary and pledgee of policies on son's life, collected proceeds without knowledge of alleged parol gift of policies by son to wife, to whom policies had never been delivered as alleged, was not liable to son's widow in damages for alleged wrongful collection of proceeds.—Beck v. The conversion, if any, of corn crop growing on land devised by testator to sisters and heirs of deceased sister by widow who went into possession on death of testator and cultivated and gathered crop did not occur on date after maturity and gathering of crop, where executrix suing for conversion was never on premises from time of death of testator until after crop had been gathered and disposed of.—Blum v. session of property under a lease from the owner is not a conversion.¹⁵

Estray. The taking up of an estray and delivering it to a third person on the order of a county commissioner has been held not to be a conversion.¹⁶

Carrier. A carrier is not guilty of conversion where he in good faith takes goods from the possession of the owner by the direction of another having apparent control of the goods and the present capacity of investing himself with actual possession;¹⁷ but this rule cannot be extended to cover a case wherein the carrier has notice of a disputed ownership.¹⁸

§ 40. — Force, Duress, or Legal Proceedings

Conversion may result from a taking by duress or force, or from a wrongful seizure under legal process or proceedings, or from a wrongful confiscation of private property by public authorities.

It is a conversion to obtain chattel property by duress.¹⁹ Also, the wrongful or unauthorized taking of the personal property of another by force is a conversion,²⁰ even though the owner is indebted to the taker.²¹ On the other hand, there is no conversion for which trover will lie where one takes that which he is entitled to possess, as discussed supra § 39, even though he obtains it by force²² or trespass.²³

Confiscation by public authorities. An officer who wrongfully confiscates the property of a private person for public or other use is guilty of conversion.²⁴ He who receives and enjoys the property so taken is also liable.²⁵ However, a warehouseman from whom confiscating officers take goods is not liable in trover therefor,²⁶ unless he was negligent.²⁷ The fact that the property might lawfully have been confiscated by the public authorities does not justify the conversion of the property by a private individual to his own use.²⁸

Legal process or proceedings. An action for conversion may be maintained for a wrongful seizure and disposition of property under an attachment,²⁹ execution,³⁰ or writ of replevin,³¹ such as the taking of property by virtue of a void writ³² or the seizure of exempt property³³ or of property belonging to a person other than the one against whom the process ran.³⁴ Also, the appropriation of money by virtue of a judgment which is void on its face constitutes a conversion.³⁵ However, a wrongful levy on books of account is not a conversion of the accounts,³⁶ nor is a taking of possession of nonexempt property³⁷ under legal process.³⁸

Likewise, a conversion will not result from a taking by a party under an order of the clerk of court entered by consent of the parties,³⁹ or by direction of a receiver and in accordance with a decree which has not been stayed or reversed.⁴⁰ A person who is authorized under the statute to replevy property levied on, and who does so in good faith, under an order of the court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, without any notice of the claim of the real owner, and who makes no use or disposition of the property inconsistent with his duty as a bailee thereof under such order, and who holds in subordination thereto, and not otherwise, is not liable in an action of trover to the real owner.⁴¹

§ 41. — Fraud, Misrepresentations, or Undue Influence

A person who obtains the personal property of another by false representations, fraudulent devices, or undue influence is liable in trover.

A person who obtains the personal property of another by false representations or fraudulent devices of any kind is liable in trover.⁴² Thus, a sale of goods procured by fraud entitles the vendor to bring trover for their value against the defrauding vendee.⁴³ If possession only and not title to the goods is obtained by the fraudulent vendee or assignee, a subvendee or second assignee, having received and converted the goods, is liable to the owner thereof for conversion;⁴⁴ but if both title and right to possession passed to the fraudulent vendee or assignee, a third person who took the goods from him and converted them is not liable in trover,⁴⁵ unless he took them without consideration or with notice of the fraud.⁴⁶ Obtaining property by undue influence is a conversion thereof.⁴⁷

§ 42. — Taking by Buyer

The taking of property under a void bill of sale may constitute a conversion, as may also the appropriation to one's use of property purchased at an invalid public sale.

The taking of property under a void bill of sale may constitute a conversion,⁴⁸ as may also the appropriation to one's use of property purchased at an invalid public sale.⁴⁹ When delivery of, and payment for, goods are to be concurrent acts, a buyer who receives and refuses to pay for the goods obtains a wrongful possession rendering him liable in trover,⁵⁰ but this is not the case where the goods are sold on credit.⁵¹

§ 43. — Retaking by Seller

A vendor of goods sold and delivered on credit is liable in trover for their value if he retakes possession of them without due process of law or the buyer's consent.

A vendor of goods sold and delivered on credit is liable in trover for their value if he retakes possession of them without due process of law or the buyer's assent,⁵² and, a fortiori, he is liable where the buyer has paid for the goods.⁵³ It is also a conversion to retake goods the title to which passed on a condition which the buyer stands ready and willing to fulfill.⁵⁴ A seller is not liable in trover for retaking possession of the goods when the contract of sale provides that he may do so on deeming himself insecure;⁵⁵ and where delivery and payment are to take place at the same time, and the seller has not waived his rights, he does not convert goods not paid for by removing them from the railroad car in which they have been loaded for shipment.⁵⁶

One who takes possession of, and claims title rights in, a chattel through a purchase or other means, from a person who had no power from the owner so to dispose of it, is guilty of a conversion of the chattel and liable in trover.

One who takes possession of, and claims rights in, a chattel through a purchase or other means, from a person who had no power from the owner so to dispose of it, is guilty of a conversion of the chattel and liable in trover.⁶³ Liability for conversion attaches to whomsoever receives and converts to his own use, or otherwise disposes of, property which was delivered to him by one to whom the property had been intrusted by the owner for another and specific purpose.⁶⁴ If, however, the person from whom defendant obtained the property had possession of it under circumstances known or assented to by the owner, which justified an inference of apparent authority to make the disposition complained of, trover will not lie;⁶⁵ nor will trover lie if the purchase is assented to by the real owner, even if the goods are sold by a wrongdoer.⁶⁶

Redelivery of property. One is not liable in trover for redelivering a chattel to the person from whom he received it,⁶⁷ notwithstanding he knew that such person's possession was wrongful.⁶⁸ If property is carried off by one person with intent to commit a larceny, it is not conversion for another person to seize it, on behalf of the owner, for the purpose of restoring it to him.⁶⁹

b. Knowledge or Good Faith

It is well established that it constitutes a conversion to receive property from one who has no right to part with, or dispose of, such property, and thereafter to exercise dominion over it, whether with knowledge of the owner's rights or in good faith without any notice thereof.

It is well established that it constitutes a conversion to receive property from one who has no right to part with, or dispose of, such property and

thereafter to use, sell, or exercise dominion over it, whether with knowledge of the owner's rights⁷⁰ or in good faith without any notice whatever of the rights of the owner.⁷¹ However, the mere purchase of personal property in good faith from a person who has no right to sell it is not a conversion;⁷² there is no conversion until the title of the lawful owner is made known and resisted⁷³ or the purchaser exercises dominion over the property by use, sale, or otherwise.⁷⁴ Also, it has been held not to be a conversion to receive purchase money for an interest in land without knowledge that the money is held in trust.⁷⁵

§ 46. Use or Disposition of Property

Unauthorized use by bailee see Bailments § 31, 44.

Reason for rule

One cannot deal with another's property as his own without the other's knowledge or consent and thereby dissipate that property.—Blankenship v. Zimmerman, 199 S.E. 527, 188 S.C. 413.

The use as collateral for a loan of notes and a trust deed owned by another and pledged without the owner's consent or knowledge constitutes a wrongful conversion of such property.—Geraci v. Sultan, 288 Ill.App. 291.

ty of another⁷⁷ is a conversion where it is unauthorized by, without the license or consent of, or contrary to, or in violation of, the orders or instructions of the owner and is in denial or defiance of his rights; and an abuse or misuse of possession lawfully obtained constitutes a conversion.⁷⁸ However, an authorized or lawful use of another's property,⁷⁹ or a mere use by a person in rightful or lawful possession,⁸⁰ is not a conversion. In order that use by a person in rightful possession may constitute conversion it must be in complete defiance of the owner's title and with an intent permanently to deprive him of his property.⁸¹ Also, it is not a conversion for a person to assign and transfer all his right, title, and interest in a chattel,⁸² or to turn the property over to the real owner;⁸³ and if a fund is to be turned over to one on the happening of a contingency on or before a certain day, it is not a conversion otherwise to dispose of the fund after the specified day, where the contingency has not happened.⁸⁴

Deposit or storage. A person depositing another's funds in a bank without authority is guilty of conversion of such funds;⁸⁵ but merely placing another's chattels in a building for storage, preservation, or safekeeping is not necessarily a conversion,⁸⁶ as where it is done to prevent a repetition of unauthorized use by a third person.⁸⁷

Transfer of stock on company's books. It has been both affirmed⁸⁸ and denied⁸⁹ that it is a conversion to cause a certificate of shares of stock to be transferred on the company's books to a person other than the owner.

§ 47. — Change in Nature

One who effects a substantial change in the form or nature of property without the knowledge or consent of the owner is liable for a conversion.

§ 48. — Sale

- a. In general
- b. Sale of property in which another has part interest or lien

a. In General

A sale of the personal property of another person is an actionable conversion where it is wrongful or unauthorized by law or the consent of the owner and is in defiance of his rights.

A sale of the personal property of another person is an actionable conversion where it is wrongful or unauthorized by law or the consent of the owner and is in defiance of his rights.⁹⁴ Obviously, a sale of property by a person entitled to its possession,⁹⁵ or by the owner thereof,⁹⁶ is not a conversion, unless it is in derogation of a mortgage, as considered in Chattel Mortgages § 260.

Necessity of delivery. A sale, in order to constitute a conversion, must be consummated by a delivery.⁹⁷

Conveyance of realty. A conveyance of premises is not a conversion of chattels thereon belonging to the tenant or to a third person not in possession.⁹⁸ Timber regarded at the time as a part of the freehold is not susceptible of being converted by the execution of a deed conveying it.⁹⁹

Property previously sold. A vendor who by sale or otherwise deprives a vendee of property previously sold to him is guilty of conversion,¹ and the second vendee is also liable where he has sold the goods and converted the proceeds to his own use.² However, neither a devisee who was without notice of plaintiff's claim to testator's realty, under an alleged oral contract to devise, until after he had conveyed it to third persons, and who was not alleged to have received anything for the conveyance,³ nor the executors, whose only interest in the land was to subject it to the debts of the testator,⁴ are liable to plaintiff under the theory of conversion.

b. Sale of Property in Which Another Has Part Interest or Lien

A wrongful sale of goods whereby a person who has a part interest therein, or a lien thereon, is deprived of his right is a conversion whether the wrongdoer is an owner of another part or a lienholder, or a stranger to the property.

A wrongful sale of goods whereby a person who

Interpretation of bill of sale

In action for reasonable value of property alleged to have been converted, if plaintiff's predecessor had legal title to some of goods involved, question whether bill of sale executed by defendant's predecessor constituted a wrongful exercise of dominion, or whether bill merely purported to convey interest of defendant's predecessor, depended upon interpretation of the bill.—American Castype Corp. v. has a part interest therein, or a lien thereon, is deprived of his right, is a conversion whether the wrongdoer is an owner of another part or a lienholder,⁵ or a stranger to the property.⁶ However, the assignment of a chose in action subject to a lien does not constitute a conversion as to the lienholder, if the assignee take with notice of the lien.⁷ The satisfaction of a lien by an invalid sale of chattels is a conversion.⁸ Where a deposit of school land certificates amounted not to a pledge but to a mortgage of the depositor's equitable interest in the land, a sale of the certificates at public auction by the holder, although void, is not a conversion.⁹

§ 49. — Removal or Asportation

A removal or asportation of a chattel is not in itself a sufficient assertion of ownership to constitute a conversion, unless prompted by an intent to deprive the owner either of his property or possession.

A removal or asportation of a chattel is not in itself a sufficient assertion of ownership to constitute a conversion,¹⁰ unless prompted by an intent to deprive the owner either of his property or possession.¹¹ It is not a conversion for one to move from his premises, or from one part of his premises to another, chattels which the owner has left there either with or without license therefor.¹² The removal of another's property out of the state is an unwarranted assumption of control of the property constituting a conversion where it is without the consent of the owner and is not justified by necessity or by any warrant whatever.¹³

§ 50. Detention of Property in General

A wrongful detention of property, where another is entitled to the immediate possession thereof, is a conversion; but a mere detention of property which rightfully came into one's possession is not an actionable conversion.

A wrongful detention of personal property, where another person is entitled to immediate possession thereof, may constitute a conversion,¹⁴ even though possession was rightfully obtained,¹⁵ such as a detention based on a negation of the owner's rights¹⁶ or accompanied by an intent to convert the property

Worthless property

(1) Where mortgagee which took possession of vacant building upon foreclosure did not know to whom two unlocked trunks and suitcase and contents found in building belonged, and owner had known that building was being abandoned but had continued without right to keep the property in building, mortgagee was not liable for conversion in causing the property, which was reasonably deemed to be worthless, to be removed from building and thrown away; and in determining its liability, mortgagee was entitled to act on appearances, and its duty depended upon value of the property to eyes of reasonable man in its position, not upon value that property might later be shown to have had, and its duty did not extend beyond reasonable conduct.—*Row v. to the holder's own use,¹⁷ or a detention or non-delivery, without legal excuse, after demand for delivery has been made by the person entitled to possession or his duly authorized agent,¹⁸ or after the owner has accepted a tender of the property by the person in possession thereof.¹⁹

On the other hand, a mere detention of another's chattels which rightfully came into one's possession is not an actionable conversion;²⁰ a rightful detention is not a conversion;²¹ and obviously trover cannot be based on an alleged detention by defendant where plaintiff holds the property,²² the property is in the hands of a third person and has never been in the possession of defendant,²³ or it is simply missing, rather than detained by defendant.²⁴

Invalid or rescinded contract. Trover will lie for the detention by defendant of property which he obtained under an invalid or illegal contract²⁵ of sale,²⁶ or a contract which has been rescinded,²⁷ except where the failure to return the property was merely a breach of an agreement to return it.²⁸ Retention of possession of property after the holder has learned or had reasonable means of knowing that the person from whom he purchased it had no right to convey title is a conversion,²⁹ and the guilty party is not relieved of liability therefor by his ignorance of the owner's title.³⁰

Effect of legal proceedings. The levy of an attachment on property in one's possession is a legal excuse for refusing to deliver it to the owner.³¹ An action of trover may be brought for the failure to return property to a person who has recovered a judgment establishing his ownership and right to possession³² in a replevin suit against him.³³ The issuance of a temporary restraining order, even if improvidently issued, which prevents one from removing lumber from the land of another, is not a conversion by the owner of the land and lumber.³⁴

Even though plaintiff was required, pursuant to a criminal complaint, not to remove property, which was in his possession, from its location, he cannot hold the complainant liable for conversion, since there had been no dealing with the property inconsistent with his rights.³⁵

§ 51. — To Permit Investigation of Title or Right to Possession

A bona fide reasonable detention of goods by one who has assumed, or is charged with, some duty with respect to them, for the purpose of ascertaining their true ownership or of determining the right of the demandant to receive them, will not sustain an action for conversion.

A bona fide reasonable detention of goods by one who has assumed, or is charged with, some duty with respect to them,³⁶ for the purpose of ascertaining their true ownership or of determining the right of demandant to receive them,³⁷ will not sustain an action for conversion. Such a defense will be of no avail, however, if plaintiff's title is admitted,³⁸ or any other reason is advanced for the detention alleged.³⁹

§ 52. — To Enforce Payment or Reimbursement

Where property was detained for the alleged purpose of enforcing payment or restoration of the purchase price, or reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the property, trover will lie where the possession was wrongful, but not where the possession was rightful.

Where property was detained for the alleged purpose of enforcing payment or restoration of the purchase price, or reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the property, trover will lie where the possession was wrongful,⁴⁰ or the amount due was tendered,⁴¹ but not where the possession was rightful⁴² and there was no legal tender of the amount due.⁴³

§ 53. — Preventing Removal of Property

A wrongful prevention of the removal of chattels by an owner who has the right of immediate possession thereof is a conversion.

A wrongful prevention of the removal of chattels by an owner who has the right of immediate possession thereof is a conversion, whether accomplished by forbidding⁴⁴ or refusing to allow⁴⁵ it, force and violence,⁴⁶ threats,⁴⁷ locking up the goods,⁴⁸ or requiring the performance of a condition which is not enforceable at law against the owner of the property.⁴⁹ A landowner who refuses to permit an owner to remove chattels wrongfully on the land, unless payment is made for such permission, is not guilty of conversion.⁵⁰

§ 54. Demand and Refusal

The necessity and sufficiency of a demand and refusal, as well as the effect of a refusal of, or compliance with, the demand, are considered infra §§ 55-62.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 55. — As against Original Taker

It is the general rule that, where some other independent act of conversion can be shown, there is no necessity for a demand for personal property by the person claiming ownership or right to possession, and a refusal by the original taker thereof to deliver it, in order to show a conversion of the property; but, such a demand and refusal are ordinarily necessary where the original taker acquired possession of the property rightfully and has neither asserted title to it nor exercised dominion over it inconsistent with the rights of the plaintiff.

It is the general rule that, where some other independent act of conversion can be shown, there is no necessity for a demand for personal property by the person claiming ownership or right to possession, and a refusal by the original taker thereof to deliver it, in order to show a conversion of the property.⁵¹ This is because a demand and refusal are ordinarily treated as merely evidence of conversion,⁵² making a prima facie case,⁵³ becoming conclusive if not rebutted or explained.⁵⁴

Since a demand and refusal is but one means of showing that there has been a conversion, it is not necessary when there has been a wrongful taking,⁵⁵ acquisition of the property as the result of a wrongful levy,⁵⁶ a wrongful transfer or sale of the property by defendant,⁵⁷ retention of money which it was defendant's duty to pay to plaintiff,⁵⁸ a possession maintained in violation of one's contract,⁵⁹ an unfulfilled promise to return the goods,⁶⁰ a diversion of property from the special purpose for which it was received,⁶¹ the wrongful use or disposition of property by a bailee thereof,⁶² or by a pledgee,⁶³ the wrongful taking of personality on leased premises by a landlord on termination of the lease,⁶⁴ assumption of ownership by the possessor,⁶⁵ or any exercise of dominion and control over the property inconsistent with the rights of the owner.⁶⁶

Where the original taker acquired possession of the property rightfully and has neither asserted title to it nor exercised dominion over it inconsistent with the rights of plaintiff, ordinarily a demand and refusal are necessary to establish a conversion of the property.⁶⁷ Where the person in possession has committed no independent act of conversion, a rightful possession in him continues as such until it is transformed into a wrongful detention by a demand for the property and a refusal to deliver it,⁶⁸ and in such a case an absolute and unqualified refusal, without legal excuse, may constitute a conversion in itself, as considered infra § 61.

Property taken by trespasser. Where the taking possession of the property by defendant constituted a trespass, no demand for its return is necessary to show a conversion.⁶⁹

Property taken by mistake. The fact that defendant carried away or otherwise converted the property in controversy by mistake does not entitle him to a demand.⁷⁰

Property obtained by fraud. One from whom chattels have been obtained by fraud can maintain an action for conversion against the person so obtaining them without a prior demand.⁷¹

Property obtained by void contract. Ordinarily, a demand and refusal need not be made before bringing an action for conversion against a defendant who has obtained the property in question by

Reason for rule

Where defendant has come into possession of property lawfully or without fault, it is generally necessary to make demand of possession of defendant before suit will lie, since there is no conversion until there has been a refusal to surrender such possession.—Hansen v. Village of Ralston, 18 N.W.2d 213, 145 Neb. 838.

Where pledges are such that the tort can be waived and the transaction can be ratified, a demand and refusal are necessary.—O'Connell v. Chicago Park Dist., 34 N.E.2d 836, 376 Ill. 550, 135 A.L.R. 598.

As fixing time of conversion

Where evidence showed only demand legally binding on purchaser of apartment at foreclosure sale who was liable for conversion of property therein at time of sale, was one made in writing more than three years after sale, such time would be the earliest date from which purchaser could be held responsible for conversion.—Tudor Arms v. In action against coal company which leased land to plaintiff, for conversion of equipment used in mining coal, where property was brought or left on defendant company's land by plaintiff himself, defendant company's possession could not have become wrongful until a demand for it had been made and refused.—Persson v. Sale by maker of promissory note

Automobile corporation's authority to make sales to customers after its president executed note to bank for loans and bills of sale as security on corporation's behalf was not terminated by mere maturity of note, in absence of demand for possession of automobiles, so that subsequent sales thereof did not constitute conversion of bank's property.—Thomsen v. means of a void contract.⁷² However, it has been held, in the case of a void contract to purchase goods entered into by a married woman, that the taking under such contract was not wrongful and that a demand and refusal are necessary to the maintenance of an action of trover.⁷³

Conversion by agent or servant. An action for conversion may be maintained without previous demand and refusal against an agent who has converted the property of his principal,⁷⁴ or against a servant who has converted the property of his master.⁷⁵ However, the mere refusal of an agent to pay over on demand money collected for his principal is not sufficient to sustain an action of trover.⁷⁶

Transfer of property by person having no title or right. An action for conversion without a prior demand and refusal is justified by a transfer of property by one having no right or title thereto, irrespective of the character of his possession.⁷⁷

§ 56. — As against Third Person

- a. In general
- b. Where third person retains property
- c. Where third person has disposed of property

a. In General

There must be a demand by the owner for the property and a refusal to return it before an action for conversion may be maintained against a defendant who has received the property from one unauthorized to dispose of it, in good faith and without notice of the owner's rights.

There must be a demand by the owner for the property and a refusal to return it before an action for conversion may be maintained against a defendant who has received the property from one unauthorized to dispose of it, in good faith and without notice of the owner's rights,⁷⁸ or against one who has purchased the property at execution sale without notice of any claim of the true owner.⁷⁹ However, where a person with knowledge of the owner's rights receives property into his possession by purchase or otherwise from one without title or authority to dispose of it, he is liable for its conversion without a showing of demand and refusal.⁸⁰

b. Where Third Person Retains Property

There is a conflict in authority on the necessity of a demand on one who acquired property from one having no right or authority to dispose of it, where the recipient has the property in his possession when suit is brought.

Where a third person has the property in his possession when suit is brought, having acquired it from one having no right or authority to dispose of it, it is the rule in a number of jurisdictions that, although he be a bona fide purchaser, the acquisition is itself sufficient evidence of a conversion, without the showing of a demand and refusal.⁸¹ The courts in a number of jurisdictions, however, have taken the position that a demand is necessary as against a bona fide purchaser who has the property in his possession,⁸² and that such a purchaser cannot be held liable for conversion in the absence of demand and refusal unless he has sold the property or has done some other act amounting to a conversion.⁸³

c. Where Third Person Has Disposed of Property

Where a third person who has acquired the property has disposed of it, by sale or other disposition amounting to a conversion, a demand and refusal are not necessary to show a conversion, regardless of the manner in which the third person acquired possession of the property.

Where a third person who has acquired the property has disposed of it, by sale or other disposition amounting to a conversion, a demand and refusal are not necessary to show a conversion, whether

§ 57. — Where Demand Useless

A demand and refusal are not essential to a conversion where it is clear that a demand would have been useless or unavailing, if it had been made.

A demand and refusal are not essential to a conversion where it is clear that a demand would have been useless or unavailing, if it had been made.⁸⁸ This may be either because defendant has asserted an adverse claim of ownership or right of possession in himself or in a third person,⁸⁹ or because it is shown that defendant had placed it beyond his power to comply with a demand if made,⁹⁰ as by having placed the property out of his possession and control.⁹¹

In case of prior refusal. Where defendant has already refused to deliver the property, further demand is not necessary to the maintenance of an action for its conversion, brought either by the original owner,⁹² or by his transferee, the transfer having been made after demand and refusal.⁹³ However, it has also been held that a purchaser from the owner after refusal cannot maintain an action to recover for the wrongful detention of the property without himself making a demand on defendant for its return.⁹⁴

§ 58. — Sufficiency of Demand

- a. Nature of demand
- b. By whom demand made
- c. On whom demand made
- d. Place of demand
- e. Time of demand

a. Nature of Demand

No formal words are required to constitute a demand, whether it is oral or in writing, but it should be a request for present delivery of the property, and must be clothed in absolute unequivocal terms.

No formal words are required to constitute a demand, whether it is oral or in writing,⁹⁵ but it should be a request for present delivery of the property,⁹⁶ and must be clothed in absolute, unequivocal terms.⁹⁷ The demand must be sufficiently definite and complete to apprise defendant of the specific property claimed,⁹⁸ and must not embrace more property than the owner is entitled to recover,⁹⁹ but a demand covering more than one is entitled to does not justify a refusal of what he may rightfully claim, unless he declines to accept anything less than the full quantity demanded.¹ A demand must be reasonable in nature in order to render the possessor guilty of conversion in failing to surrender possession to the owner.²

Requiring possession to transport or deliver; demand by letter. A demand is insufficient which would require for compliance therewith that the person on whom it is made transport or carry the chat-

tel to the owner.³ Therefore, it has been held that a demand by letter, in the absence of a reply, is insufficient where it would require for compliance that the possessor take the goods to the person demanding.⁴ If, however, the letter of demand is replied to by a refusal to deliver or a denial of possession of the property, such demand and refusal are sufficient evidence of conversion.⁵ A letter written after an alleged conversion has been held not to be construable as a demand.⁶

Showing of title or right to possession. In order that a demand and refusal may serve as a sufficient basis for an action for conversion, it is not necessary that plaintiff show evidence of his title or right to immediate possession at the time of demand,⁷ unless the person in possession of the property is ignorant of the identity of the true owner.⁸ It has been held that a demand by a transferee of the property on a bailee of the transferor must be accompanied by evidence of change of ownership, in order that a demand and refusal in such a case may be sufficient evidence of conversion by the bailee.⁹

Readiness to remove property. In order to constitute a valid demand it is not necessary that the owner be prepared to remove his property immediately.¹⁰

Demand for proceeds or payment. A demand of payment for, or of the proceeds of the sale of, the converted property is equivalent to a demand of the property itself.¹¹

Circumstances under which made. A demand for delivery of chattels to the owner thereof must be made under such circumstances as to enable the possessor to comply therewith.¹²

Further use of property after an abortive demand therefor and a refusal to surrender it does not and cannot make that demand a lawful one.¹³

b. By Whom Demand Made

A demand, in order to be sufficient, must be made by the person having the right of immediate possession of the property demanded, or by his attorney, or by some other agent.

A demand, in order to be sufficient, must be made by the person having the right of immediate possession of the property demanded,¹⁴ or by his attorney,¹⁵ or by some other agent.¹⁶ The authority of an attorney to make a demand for his client will be presumed, as considered in Attorney and Client § 73, unless another method of making a demand has been agreed on between the owner of the property and the holder thereof.¹⁷ The fact that a person who makes a demand is the attorney for the owner in bringing an action for conversion of the property is not sufficient to raise a presumption of his authority to make a demand, unless it is shown that he was acting as attorney at the time of the demand.¹⁸

An agent who is not an attorney must exhibit his authority if requested to do so by the person in possession of the property.¹⁹ If, when the agent of the owner makes a demand, his authority is not questioned by the person in possession of the property, it operates as a waiver of all objection to the authority of the agent, and that issue cannot be raised at the trial.²⁰

A demand, to be effective, must be made on the person who has the actual possession or control of the property claimed, who is obligated to surrender it, and who has the power to deliver it up, if he would.

A demand, to be effective, must be made on the person who has the actual possession or control of the property claimed,²¹ who is obligated to surrender it,²² and who has the power to deliver it up, if he would.²³ If demand is made on an agent or employee, the power to surrender the goods must be within the scope of his agency or employment.²⁴ In order to maintain an action for conversion against two or more who are wrongfully in joint possession of the property of another, a demand must be made on each of them.²⁵

On the other hand, an action may be maintained against copartners, although a demand was made of but one of them, where their possession was joint.²⁶ However, a demand on one partner after a dissolution of the partnership will not charge another partner with a conversion of goods delivered to the firm.²⁷ A demand for property held by a corporation must be made on the officer or governing body authorized to act in the premises.²⁸

A demand made on an agent in charge of a warehouse or grain elevator is a sufficient demand as against his principal,²⁹ and the sufficiency of the demand in such a case cannot be affected by any agreement with, or instructions from, the principal, but is controlled by public policy.³⁰

A demand on a carrier to which defendant has intrusted the goods for shipment is sufficient demand as against the shipper.³¹

Demand on public officer. A demand on a public officer who has seized property under an execution will not operate as a demand on the execution creditor, in order to make him liable for conversion of the property without further demand.³² Where the statutes do not require his official designation, a demand addressed to a public officer in his private name is sufficient.³³

d. Place of Demand

A demand for the delivery of chattels must be made at such a place as to enable the possessor to comply therewith.

A demand for the delivery of chattels must be made at such a place as to enable the possessor to comply therewith.³⁴ The demand for return of the property need not be made at the place where it is to be received,³⁵ and a personal demand for the possession of chattels is sufficient if made on the one having them under his control, although the property is not at the place of demand,³⁶ and although defendant is not bound to deliver the property where demanded.³⁷ However, a demand made on defendant at a considerable distance from the location of the property has been held insufficient.³⁸ A demand is ordinarily sufficient if made at defendant's dwelling, particularly if defendant was under contract to deliver specific articles on demand,³⁹ and when it is made long enough before the commencement of the action for conversion to enable defendant to comply therewith.⁴⁰

A showing of a written demand left at defendant's dwelling, without more, has been held insufficient evidence of conversion, and it has been said that defendant is not bound under such circumstances to carry the property to the owner.⁴¹ Property may be demanded of a bailee wherever he may be at the time, and although he is not bound to deliver it at that place, and, if the bailee refuses to deliver the property, no further demand is necessary.⁴²

A demand, in order to be sufficient, must be made after the plaintiff's right of possession has accrued, and

Waiver of insufficiency
In order to make out a case of conversion on proof of demand and refusal of surrender of property, the parties must, at the time such demand and refusal occurs, be in close proximity to each other and to the property, so that defendant can deliver and plaintiff can receive such property; but if defendant, who allegedly converted plaintiff's property, claimed title thereto in defiance of plaintiff's claimed title, he thereby waived fact that plaintiff's demand for the property was made when neither was near it.—Pantz v. while he has the right of immediate possession, and at such time as to enable the possessor to comply therewith.

A demand for the delivery of a chattel must be made at such time as to enable the possessor to comply therewith.⁴³ A demand, in order to be sufficient, must be made after plaintiff's right of possession has accrued,⁴⁴ and while plaintiff has the right of immediate possession,⁴⁵ and, where plaintiff relies on demand and refusal as the only evidence of conversion, while defendant has control of the property so as to be able to comply with the demand.⁴⁶ Where demand and refusal are relied on as the sole evidence of conversion, the demand must be made before the action for conversion is brought,⁴⁷ but a demand and refusal may serve as evidence of a prior conversion, although made after issuance or service of summons in the action.⁴⁸

§ 59. — Sufficiency of Refusal

- a. In general
- b. Qualified refusal
- c. Refusal by agent, servant, or partner

a. In General

Where a demand and refusal are relied on to show a conversion, the refusal must be absolute and unconditional and a denial of the plaintiff's title and right to possession of the property demanded.

Where a demand and refusal are relied on to show a conversion, the refusal must be absolute and unconditional and a denial of plaintiff's title or right to possession of the property demanded.⁴⁹ An oral refusal, in order to be actionable, must be positive and unambiguous, and not merely evasive.⁵⁰ Mere silence or neglect to answer will not constitute a sufficient refusal,⁵¹ unless defendant took time to consider and promised to answer,⁵² or unless the situation is such as to impose on defendant an obligation to speak.⁵³ Likewise, a mere failure to deliver when demand is made is not equivalent to a refusal.⁵⁴ A sufficient refusal will be presumed when evasion or delay makes it apparent that defendant does not intend to comply with the demand.⁵⁵ A commingling of plaintiff's goods with defendant's, so that neither party could identify them, is equivalent to a refusal.⁵⁶

Refusal by person having only part of property. A general refusal to deliver property on demand, which refusal is made by a person having in his possession or under his control only a part of the property demanded, will show a conversion by him of that portion of the property demanded which he had under his control at the time of the refusal.⁵⁷

Statement of grounds of refusal. If, when refusing to deliver the property on demand, defendant states any ground for his refusal, and has at the time any sufficient reason for refusing, his refusal must be placed distinctly on the true ground,⁵⁸ and all reasons for refusal which are not mentioned at the time of refusal, if any at all are mentioned, are deemed to be waived, and cannot be later raised.⁵⁹

Where the refusal is not absolute, but is qualified by certain conditions which are reasonable and justifiable, imposed in good faith, and in recognition of the rights of the plaintiff, it will not serve as a sufficient basis for an action in conversion.

Where the refusal is not absolute, but is qualified by certain conditions which are reasonable and justifiable, and which are imposed in good faith, and in recognition of the rights of plaintiff, it will not serve as a sufficient basis for an action for conversion.⁶⁰ The conditions, however, must have a

Refusal held unqualified

Refusal of defendant who allegedly converted plaintiff's furniture, to deliver it to plaintiff, would be deemed to have been unqualified and in defiance of title claimed by plaintiff, even though they were not in close proximity to each other and to furniture when demand was made, where defendant's agent was in charge of furniture at place from which plaintiff made demand on defendant by telephone, and defendant unqualifiedly refused to permit plaintiff to have the furniture.—Pants v. legal foundation,⁶¹ or rest on a reasonable doubt as to the validity of plaintiff's claim,⁶² or be based on a reasonable doubt as to defendant's duty under the circumstances.⁶³ Where the qualified or conditional refusal is not reasonable or justifiable under the circumstances, and amounts to a denial of plaintiff's rights in the property, it will be sufficient to sustain an action for conversion,⁶⁴ and it is for the jury, under proper instructions from the court, to pass on the existence of the qualification and its reasonableness, as discussed infra § 146.

c. Refusal by Agent, Servant, or Partner

The refusal by an agent or a servant to deliver to the plaintiff on demand property entrusted to such agent or servant by his principal or master ordinarily will not make the principal or master liable for conversion.

The refusal by an agent⁶⁵ or a servant⁶⁶ to deliver to plaintiff on demand property entrusted to such agent or servant by his principal or master ordinarily will not make the principal or master liable for conversion of the property. If, however, it was the duty of the agent or servant, in obedience to instructions from his principal or master,⁶⁷ or by virtue of the nature of his business,⁶⁸ to act in response to a demand for the property, the refusal by the agent or servant is treated as the refusal of the principal or master, and will sustain an action against such principal or master for the conversion of the property.

A refusal by one member of a partnership to deliver property in the possession of the partnership is equally effective to show a conversion by the other partners.⁶⁹

§ 60. — Time for Complying or Refusing

One on whom demand is made for property in his possession may have a reasonable time to determine the validity of the claim, and whether to comply with the demand.

Before complying with, or refusing a demand for, delivery of property in his possession or control, the person on whom the demand is made may have a reasonable time for investigation and consideration of the validity of the claim, and to determine what course to pursue.⁷⁰

Where the possession of a person remains rightful until transformed into a wrongful detention by a demand and refusal of delivery, the demand and refusal may constitute a conversion in itself.

Where the possession of a person remains rightful until transformed into a wrongful detention by a demand and refusal of delivery, the demand and refusal may constitute a conversion in itself.⁷¹ Where a demand and refusal are relied on to show a conversion, the date of the demand and refusal is ordinarily treated as the date of the conversion of the property,⁷² and in such case the statute of limitations on an action for conversion runs from that time, as discussed infra § 91. curred, however, the evidence of demand and refusal relates back to the time of the actual conversion.⁷³

Necessity of existence of property demanded. In order that a demand and refusal may suffice to establish a conversion it must affirmatively appear that at the time thereof the property was in existence.⁷⁴

b. Necessity of Possession or Control of Property

In order that a demand and refusal may be relied on as the basis of an action for conversion, it must appear that at the time of the demand the property was in the defendant's possession or so far under his control as to permit his compliance with the demand when made.

Where no other conversion can be shown, in order that a demand and refusal may of themselves be a sufficient basis for an action for conversion, it must appear that at the time of the demand the property was in defendant's possession or so far under his control as to permit his compliance with the demand when made.⁷⁵ However, an unqualified refusal by one having control of the property is sufficient evidence of a conversion, even though he was unable at the time of demand and refusal to make an immediate delivery.⁷⁶

c. As Waiver

A demand for delivery of property made subsequent to an act amounting to a conversion of the property will not amount to a waiver of the prior act of conversion.

A demand for delivery of property made subsequent to an act amounting to a conversion of the property will not amount to a waiver of the prior act of conversion,⁷⁷ and it has been held that, if a demand is made and the property demanded is not delivered up in response thereto, a second demand for the same property will not operate as a waiver of the first demand.⁷⁸ However, a demand in person has been held to waive a prior demand by letter,⁷⁹ and plaintiff's assent to defendant's retention of the property after demand will operate as a waiver of the demand.⁸⁰

The defendant's compliance with a demand before an action for conversion is instituted bars a recovery in such an action, if the defendant was lawfully in possession of the property.

Defendant's compliance with a demand before an action for conversion is instituted bars a recovery in such an action, if defendant was lawfully in possession of the property.⁸¹ However, a promise to comply, not followed by complete compliance with the demand before an action is brought, does not constitute compliance.⁸² An offer to comply made after the commencement of an action for conversion does not affect the plaintiff's rights in the action, where the plaintiff's original demand was disregarded,⁸³ or refused.⁸⁴

§ 64. — Origin and History

Originally, trover was an action of trespass on the case for recovery of damages against one who had found goods and refused to return them on demand but converted them to his own use.

The action of trover was, in its origin, an action of trespass on the case for the recovery of damages against a person who had found goods and refused to deliver them on demand to the owner, but converted them to his own use, from which word finding (trover) the remedy is called an action of trover.⁸⁵ By a fiction of law actions of trover were at length permitted to be brought against any person who had in his possession, by any means whatever, the personal property of another, or sold or used it without the consent of the owner, or refused to deliver it when demanded.⁸⁶ As was said of this action by Lord Mansfield: "In form it is a fiction; in substance it is a remedy to recover the value of personal chattels wrongfully converted by another to his own use."⁸⁷ The form supposes defendant may have come lawfully by the possession of the goods,⁸⁸ and if he did not, by bringing this action plaintiff waives the trespass.⁸⁹

§ 65. — Gist of Action

A conversion is the gist of an action of trover in respect of the manner in which possession was obtained by the defendant.

A conversion is the gist of the action of trover,⁹⁰ irrespective of the manner in which defendant obtained possession of the property.⁹¹ Where the act of conversion is admitted, the only question to be determined is the amount recoverable,⁹² and without proof of conversion plaintiff cannot recover, whatever else he may prove, or whatever may be his right of recovery in another form of action.⁹³ No damages are recoverable for the act of taking; all must be for the act of conversion.⁹⁴ Since a conversion is the gist of the action, the statement of finding or trover is now immaterial and not traversable, as is discussed infra § 101.

§ 66. — Nature

An action of trover is a tort action, possessory and transitory in its nature.

An action of trover has always been classified as an action of tort,⁹⁵ and is one form of the action of trespass on the case.⁹⁶

Transitory action. The action of trover is a transitory action.⁹⁷

Legal or equitable. The remedy by action of trover is in its nature legal as distinguished from equitable.⁹⁸ While it has been said that the action of trover is equitable in its nature,⁹⁹ and that a decision necessitates the weighing of equities as between the parties,¹ this form of action is not available for the protection or enforcement of equitable titles or rights.²

Possessory. It has been held that trover is a possessory action based on a disturbance of the owner's right to possession of a chattel.³

§ 67. — Purpose

Action of trover is a remedy to recover the value of the property wrongfully converted and not the specific property itself, unless otherwise provided by statute.

An action of trover is not an action to enrich the owner at the expense of the converter,⁴ but is merely a remedy to recover the value of the property wrongfully converted.⁵ The specific property itself cannot be recovered by an action of trover,⁶ but only by an action of detinue or replevin.⁷

Trial of title. Questions of title to personalty are triable in actions of trover.⁸ Trover being a purely personal and transitory action, is not a proper form of action to try title to land,⁹ and it will not lie when title to land is an issue;¹⁰ but it will lie against a defendant claiming under a void tax deed when it appears that his holding was fugitive and solely for the purpose of cutting timber.¹¹

§ 68. Statutory Provisions and Remedies

Generally, where the common-law action of trover has been abolished by statutory provisions, the substance of the action has been retained and in some instances has been enlarged to include remedies in cases not recognized by the common law.

In some jurisdictions wherein the common-law action of trover has been abolished by code or statutory provisions, or the name is no longer used,¹² the substance of the common-law action has not been abolished,¹³ the rule of damages has not been changed,¹⁴ and there is a remedy as complete as the common-law action.¹⁵ A statute may grant relief by trover in cases wherein such form of action was not recognized by the common law,¹⁶ and may create an enlarged measure of damages.¹⁷ In some states the statutory form of action for conversion is limited to the conversion of "plaintiff's goods."¹⁸ The Negotiable Instruments Law has no relation to an action for conversion.¹⁹

§ 69. Exclusiveness of Remedy; Availability of Other Remedies

An action of trover will lie even though it is not an exclusive remedy and other remedies are available.

Trover is a remedy for the redress of the legal wrong denominated "conversion", as discussed supra § 2, and it will lie even though it is not the exclusive remedy for a wrongful conversion,²⁰ and other remedies may be available.²¹ If the following actions are permissible in the particular jurisdiction and the facts warrant them, the owner of property which has been wrongfully converted has the choice of bringing trover or replevin;²² trover or detinue;²³ a suit for wrongful conversion or one on the implied promise for the value of the property;²⁴ trover, replevin, or a suit on an implied promise for the value of the property;²⁵ trover or a suit in sequestration;²⁶ trover or an action for money had and received;²⁷ or trover, trespass, or an action for money had and received.²⁸

Indeed, in some instances an action of trover may be brought even though another civil action relating to,²⁹ or an indictment for larceny of,³⁰ the subject matter is pending. However, as against an individual who participated actively in a conversion by a corporation but was not himself enriched thereby, plaintiff has a cause of action in trover only.³¹ Trover cannot be maintained for goods obtained under an invalid contract while an action founded on the contract is pending,³² and, as discussed in Judgments §§ 746-749, a judgment in another form of action will bar an action of trover for the same act.

Action available whenever trespass lies. Whenever an action of trespass will lie for the taking of a chattel, an action of trover may be maintained.³³

Waiver of other rights of action. Where property has been wrongfully taken or seized, the owner may waive the trespass³⁴ or the right to claim the return of the property³⁵ and sue for conversion.

§ 70. What Law Governs

The law of the place where the property is situated at the time of conversion governs in an action of trover.

The law which governs in an action of trover is that of the place where the property in question was situated at the time of the alleged conversion thereof.³⁶ Some statutes have been construed to relate only to actions thereafter commenced,³⁷ while others have been held applicable to pending actions.³⁸

§ 71. Persons Entitled to Sue

The rules governing persons entitled to sue in an action of trover and conversion are considered infra §§ 72-76.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 72. — Title and Right to Possession in General

An action in trover will not lie unless at the time of conversion the plaintiff had a right of property, general or special, and a right of possession, or was in actual possession.

It is stated in some decisions that trover will not lie unless at the time of conversion plaintiff had a property right, general or special, in the chattel converted, or was in possession, or had a right to the immediate possession, thereof,³⁹ while in other decisions it is declared that plaintiff in trover must have had both property, either general or special, and possession or the right of immediate possession.⁴⁰ Also it has been stated that plaintiff must have had either an absolute or special title or the right to possession of the property at the time of the conversion,⁴¹ and in other decisions it is declared that he must have had both.⁴² Furthermore, it has been said that plaintiff must have had title at the time of the conversion.⁴³ Another statement or holding is that plaintiff must have had some right, title, or interest in the property alleged to have been converted.⁴⁴

It is generally regarded as necessary⁴⁵ and sufficient⁴⁶ that plaintiff shall have had either possession or the right to possession at the time of the alleged conversion; he must have had at least a right to immediate possession.⁴⁷ Since a right of possession ordinarily depends on some title or right of property, general or special, as discussed infra § 73, he must have had, generally speaking, either actual possession or ownership and right of possession.⁴⁸ At any rate, trover may be brought by a person who had both a right of property and a right of possession at the time of the conversion,⁴⁹ or, in other words, it may be brought by any one whose ownership of, or special interest in, the property involved entitled him to the right of immediate possession thereof at the time of its conversion.⁵⁰ On the other hand, trover cannot be maintained by a person who had neither title, nor right of possession,⁵¹ nor prior possession.⁵²

§ 73. — Title, Possession, or Right of Possession, Alone

Title or a right of property without possession or the right to immediate possession is insufficient to support an action in trover, while actual possession or the right to immediate possession is sufficient against anyone but the true owner.

Title to, or a right of property in, a chattel will not alone support an action in trover;⁵³ plaintiff must have had either actual possession or the right to immediate possession at the time of the alleged conversion, as is discussed supra § 72. Prima facie, however, a person having the title to, or general property in, a chattel is in constructive possession, or has the right of possession, thereof, and may sue in trover.⁵⁴

Actual possession of a chattel at the time of a conversion thereof will sustain trover⁵⁵ as against a stranger, trespasser, person without title, or any person except the true owner, or one claiming under him.⁵⁶ While actual possession is regarded as sufficient evidence of title to enable plaintiff to maintain trover against a wrongdoer or stranger to the title,⁵⁷ the rule that a person who was in actual possession at the time of the conversion is entitled to maintain trover against a person not connected with the title may apply even though the title is conceded to be in a third person,⁵⁸ plaintiff obtained possession under a void transfer or proceeding,⁵⁹ or, except in some jurisdictions,⁶⁰ even though plaintiff acquired possession wrongfully.⁶¹

Right to immediate possession may be a sufficient basis for the maintenance of an action of trover⁶² against a person who is not the true owner.⁶³ Title or right of property, general or special, must also be proved to be in plaintiff whenever his right of immediate possession cannot be otherwise shown.⁶⁴

§ 74. — Nature and Extent of Right, Title, Interest, or Possession

An equitable title will not suffice for the maintenance of trover, unless coupled with actual possession. Legal title or a vested legal interest, either general or special, is sufficient. Plaintiff's recovery, however, must be on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of that of his adversary.

An equitable title or right will not suffice for the maintenance of trover,⁶⁵ or at least it alone is not sufficient;⁶⁶ but equitable ownership and actual possession are sufficient.⁶⁷ Legal title or actual ownership in plaintiff is sufficient,⁶⁸ and in some cases has been held necessary,⁶⁹ but absolute or unqualified title need not be shown.⁷⁰ A vested legal interest, if acquired prior to the conversion alleged,⁷¹ is sufficient to support trover.⁷² Such an interest may be either general or special,⁷³ and may be founded on a possession warranted by law,⁷⁴ or consented to by the owner.⁷⁵ Plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own right or title, and not on the weakness of that of his adversary;⁷⁶ and where his alleged title is void, he cannot recover⁷⁷ unless he had actual possession and defendant is a stranger to the title, as is discussed supra § 73. Possession under a claim of title or right is sufficient to sustain an action for conversion against one who does not show a better right or title.⁷⁸

Right to immediate possession, to constitute the basis of plaintiff's suit in trover, must be absolute, unconditional,⁷⁹ and exist at the time the action is commenced.⁸⁰ There is no necessity, however, that the right of possession should have existed prior to the time of conversion, where such right springs out of the conversion itself.⁸¹

Constructive possession. A constructive possession founded on a valid title⁸² is sufficient for the maintenance of trover.⁸³

Insufficient possession. A person did not have such possession as enables him to maintain the action where the goods in question were not delivered to him but remained in defendant's store subject to defendant's control and direction,⁸⁴ even though plaintiff's representative had a key to the store.⁸⁵ Where plaintiff claims ownership of certain goods which have never been separated from a larger number, such goods cannot be the subject of conversion.⁸⁶

Unlawful possession. Where by statute a possession is deemed to be unlawful, possession under such circumstances does not constitute any interest or ownership for the maintenance of an action in trover.⁸⁷

§ 75. — Property Taken from Land

In order to maintain an action of trover for conversion of personality taken from land, it is necessary that the plaintiff shall have had at the time of conversion either actual possession, or title and constructive possession, or right to possession of the land.

The right of a person to maintain trover for the conversion of property taken from land depends on the possession of the land from which the property was taken.⁸⁸ In order to be entitled to sue, it is necessary and sufficient that plaintiff shall have had, at the time of the alleged conversion, either actual possession, or title and constructive possession, or right to possession of the land from which the property was taken,⁸⁹ or that defendant's possession of the land was only fugitive, fraudulent, and under no bona fide claim of title.⁹⁰

a. Holder or Owner of Negotiable Instrument

The owner of a note may maintain an action for conversion thereof, even though the note has never been delivered to him.

Only the owner of a note may maintain an action for the conversion thereof.⁹¹ On the other hand, the owner may sue even though the note has never been delivered to him.⁹² Also, the holder and owner of a check note, or bond may sue for a conversion thereof,⁹³ even though he cannot maintain an action thereon in his own name,⁹⁴ as where he is neither the payee nor an indorsee.⁹⁵ In some states, however, it has been held that the owner of a note or bond cannot recover for a conversion of it, unless it has been legally indorsed to him.⁹⁶ The holder of a note indorsed in blank may maintain trover for a conversion thereof.⁹⁷

b. Consignor or Consignee

A consignor who has title and right of immediate possession or a consignee who has accepted an assignment may maintain an action of trover.

A consignor of goods may bring trover for the conversion of them where he has title⁹⁸ and the right of immediate possession.⁹⁹ So may a consignee who has accepted a consignment,¹ or made advances thereon.²

c. Person Interested in Decedent's Estate

An executor or administrator having title or right of immediate possession may maintain an action in trover for conversion of decedent's goods, but an heir or distributee may not, unless there has been no administration or possession by the administrator.

A conversion of a decedent's goods will subject the wrong-doer to an action in trover by the executor or administrator, as discussed in Executors and Administrators § 710, provided the latter has title to the goods or right to the immediate possession thereof,³ or a special right of property,⁴ even though letters testamentary are not issued until after the time of conversion.⁵ Ordinarily, an heir or distributee is not entitled to sue, as discussed in Decedent and Distribution § 85. It is otherwise, however, where there has been no administration⁶ or the administrator has never taken possession.⁷ The surviving widow may sue if the property was in her possession at the time of the conversion⁸ or is exempted to her by statute.⁹ It is held that a subvendee from the next of kin may sue.¹⁰

d. Part or Joint Owner or Owners

Joint owners may unite in an action for conversion without showing the exact interest of each in the converted chattel.

Joint owners of a chattel may unite in an action for a conversion of it,¹¹ without showing the exact interest of each in it.¹² A part-owner may maintain trover for the conversion of his interest.¹³

The necessity or propriety of joining part or joint owners as parties plaintiff is discussed infra § 92.

e. Lessor or Lessee

A lessor entitled to immediate possession may maintain trover for the wrongful conversion of fixtures, and a lessee may maintain trover for a wrongful removal of personality rented with the premises.

A lessor entitled to the immediate possession may maintain trover for the wrongful conversion of fixtures.¹⁴ A lessee may bring trover for goods taken under a wrongful distress, as discussed in Landlord and Tenant § 715, or for wrongful removal by a landlord of personality rented with the premises.¹⁵

f. Lienholder

Ordinarily, a lien will not support trover, unless at the time of conversion the lienholder had possession, or the right of immediate possession.

A lien will not support trover,¹⁶ unless at the time of the conversion the lienholder had possession¹⁷ or the right to immediate possession,¹⁸ defendant took the property with notice or knowledge of the lien,¹⁹ or the lien was rendered ineffectual or diminished in value by the conversion.²⁰ The existence at one time of another and prior lien on

g. Other Persons

The rights of various other persons to maintain trover have been considered by the courts.

A person who was in possession of personal property as an agent may have such a special interest in it as will support an action of trover,²² but not as against the principal or one acting under his consent.²³

Militia commander. A commander of a company of the National Guard who is liable to the state for the safe custody and return of certain property, as discussed in Militia § 17, has such a rightful possession or special property as enables him to sue.²⁴

Creditor without judgment lien cannot maintain trover against one who took goods from the debtor with fraudulent intent.²⁵

Creditor in possession. A creditor holding possession of a debtor-corporation's property may not maintain an action of conversion, where the legal title to the corporation's property is held by its directors as trustees for all creditors.²⁶

Buyer of merchandise acquiring title prior to delivery may maintain an action of conversion,²⁷ and any statutory provisions to the contrary as to the passage of title may be waived for purposes of such an action.²⁸

§ 77. Persons Liable

Every person is liable in trover who personally or by agent commits an act of conversion or who participates in the conversion by instigating, aiding, or assisting another, or who knowingly benefits by its proceeds in whole or in part.

Manufacturer's refusal to deliver to consumer

Where automobile manufacturer

had received full payment for automobile sold by distributor and distributor's agent, but withheld delivery in an attempt to collect money allegedly due to distributor's agent which had nothing to do with sale of automobile, whether distributor or distributor's agent had authority to represent manufacturer was immaterial to manufacturer's liability in conversion to buyer for refusal to deliver automobile.—Lomba v. General Motors Corp., 6 N.W.2d 890, 303 Mich. 556.

Owner of incorporated business

Where seller filed assumed name certificate stating that he owned radio products company, and the certificate was on record when cause of action against seller for conversion arose in favor of buyer as well as at date of trial and although there was evidence that the seller's business had been incorporated prior to the time the buyer's cause of action arose, there was no showing that the seller complied with statute requiring a business firm to give notice of intention of becoming incorporated, the seller was personally liable for the act of conversion.—Spokane v. Coy, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 672.

A purchaser of real property leased to a tenant was put on inquiry as to the terms of the lease and was liable for the "conversion" of tenant's property if he prevented tenant from removing improvements permitted to be removed under the lease.—Grossman v. Successive conversions

There can be successive converters of the same property and the party wronged by the successive conversions has a cause of action against all the participants.—U. S. v. Fleming, D.C.Iowa, 69 F.Supp. 252.

Storage company and creditor of third person

Storage company with which wife stored furniture in her name, and husband's creditor who instituted garnishment proceedings against storage company were both liable to wife for conversion where storage company made no attempt to defend garnishment action or to postpone sale until wife should have notice of proceedings, and stated in garnishment answer that goods were those of husband.—Sprague v. Allied Mills, 261 N.W. 892, 129 Neb. 394.

Purchaser and seller

Where buyer of automobile sold old automobile, which he had agreed to turn in as part of purchase price, to third party after title had passed to seller, third party was in same position as buyer with respect to liability to seller for conversion.—Wilson Motor Co. v. Lamping Motors, 78 P.2d 559, 194 Wash. 416.

other,³¹ or who knowingly³² benefits by its proceeds in whole or in part.³³ On the other hand, one person is not liable for a conversion by another person where he did not direct, advise, participate in, or benefit from, it, and he does not bear such a relationship to the latter person as would make him responsible for his acts.³⁴

Purchasers or creditors. One who purchases property from a person in whose possession it was placed for his exclusive use may be held liable in trover to the original owner.³⁵ Persons taking and removing property in their debtor's possession notwithstanding a sale thereof to another, have been held guilty of conversion, where there was evidence that they knew of and urged such sale and no showing was made that they did anything to bring themselves within the statute relating to fraudulent conveyances.³⁶

Persons directing levy by officer. A judgment creditor, attachment plaintiff, or a stranger, who advises, directs, or assists an officer to seize property not belonging to the debtor, or who ratifies the sale thereof by the officer, is liable to the owner for a conversion.³⁷ However, merely pointing out to an officer property on which to levy will not in the event of a wrongful levy render a creditor guilty of a conversion.³⁸ Also, plaintiff in attachment is not liable in trover for the value of property which without fault on the officer's part was destroyed pending the attachment.³⁹

Landlord and tenant

Mere relation of landlord and tenant does not ipso facto create tenant an agent for landlord with respect to landlord's liability for tenant's conversion of plow.—Kelly v. Oliver Farm Equipment Sales Co., 36 P.2d 888, 169 Okl. 269.

Employee

One employed by oil company as branch manager at its bulk sales station under contract making him responsible for company's stocks, equipment, and funds coming into his possession, and shortages developed by company's audits was not liable to corporation for shortage caused by his employee's embezzlement or theft of company's funds or goods committed to custody solely of such employee, who acknowledged sole responsibility for such shortage.—Arkansas Fuel Oil Co. v. National Surety Corp., 184 So. 560, 191 La. 115.

Bank

Where prospective buyer of scrap iron went to bank and informed the vice president that he understood that the scrap iron was the property of a certain estate, and that the bank had the right to sell it, and vice president of bank informed prospective buyer that he knew nothing of any property of such estate being in the neighborhood but that if there was any, the bank had the right to sell it, and would sell it to the prospective buyer for certain sum, but that that prospective buyer should make sure that the scrap iron belonged to the estate before removing it, and prospective buyer took the scrap iron which proved to belong to a third person, the bank was not liable for "conversion".—Nye v. Johnson, 4 N.W.2d 819, 72 N.D. 95.

Manufacturer

Manufacturer was not liable to debtor for conversion of debtor's property by credit manager of its collecting agent while collecting for lamps consigned to debtor by manufacturer, where manufacturer had been paid in full, converted property had not been sold by manufacturer to debtor, and manufacturer had not participated in acts of conversion.—McCarthy v. General Electric Co., 49 P.2d 993, 151 Or. 519, 100 A.L.R. 1370.

Credit association

Credit association which had advanced money to tenant on strength of landlords' waivers of their landlords' liens on crops, and which had taken a mortgage from tenant, was not liable to landlords for alleged conversion by tenant of a portion of the crop, where there was no showing that association knew or should have known of alleged conversion or that association had participated in the alleged conversion.—White River Production Credit Ass'n v. Fears, 209 S.W.2d 294, 213 Ark. 75.

§ 78. — Joint Tort-Feasors

All persons engaged in a conversion are liable and may be sued jointly or severally, provided, if it is sought to hold them jointly liable, the conversion was joint.

A joint conversion is the single concerted act of several persons, or the result of the acts of several persons which, although separately committed, all tend to the same end.⁴⁰ All persons engaged in a conversion are liable⁴¹ as principals;⁴² they are liable⁴³ and may be sued⁴⁴ jointly or severally, provided, if it is sought to hold them jointly liable, the conversion was joint.⁴⁵ In order to hold persons jointly liable for conversion it is necessary to show that each was guilty of conversion, either by agreement among them or each acting separately in such a manner as to show that the act of each was the exercise of the assumption of dominion over the property unauthorized by the rightful owner.⁴⁶ Concert of action and unity of design, required to hold persons jointly and severally liable, may be inferred from the nature of their acts, the relation of the persons, their respective interests, and other circumstances.⁴⁷ If liable and sued jointly, damages will be assessed against all jointly, even though all were not equally guilty.⁴⁸ The fact that no case is made or recovery obtained against one defendant does not necessarily enable another defendant to escape liability.⁴⁹

§ 79. Conditions Precedent

A failure of the plaintiff to perform a condition precedent will defeat his action for a wrongful conversion.

A failure of plaintiff to perform a condition precedent will defeat his action for a wrongful conversion.⁵⁰ However, an action for conversion of a note secured by a trust deed may be maintained without first foreclosing the trust deed, since the

(1) A husband whose fraudulent management of plaintiff wife's securities pledged for his indebtedness resulted in a total loss thereof, is liable, and a corporation controlled by the husband which wrongfully received proceeds of sales of the securities was also liable.—*Dow v. § 80. — Tender of Amount of Lien or Indebtedness

Generally, where a lien on, or an indebtedness for, goods exist in favor of one in possession of them, a tender of the amount of such lien or indebtedness must be made before trover will lie.

Where a lien on, or an indebtedness for, goods exist in favor of one in possession of them, a tender of the amount of such lien or indebtedness must be made before trover will lie,⁵³ unless he previously disposed of the property or otherwise terminated his lien,⁵⁴ neglected to claim a lien and state the amount thereof,⁵⁵ states that he does not intend to accept payment,⁵⁶ coupled the lien with another claim,⁵⁷ based his refusal to deliver on another ground,⁵⁸ or failed to perform the contract which would have entitled him to a lien.⁵⁹ Tender of amount actually due need not be shown where defendant claimed a lien for a larger sum than he was entitled to collect,⁶⁰ or the owner offered to pay all just charges.⁶¹

§ 81. — Rescission of Contract and Return of Consideration

Where title has passed in a sale or exchange of goods procured by the defendant's fraud, the plaintiff cannot recover for a conversion thereof without proof of a rescission of the contract and of a return or tender of the consideration received.

Where title has passed in a sale or exchange of goods procured by defendant's fraud, plaintiff cannot recover for a conversion thereof without proof of a rescission of the contract and of a return or tender of the consideration received.⁶² If, however, title has not passed to the holder of the goods, and he converts them, the owner may bring trover without tendering or paying back anything received as hire or part payment therefor.⁶³ A return or tender at the trial has been held sufficient.⁶⁴ Also, an offer to return is sufficient where defendant waives an actual or formal tender.⁶⁵

§ 82. — Institution of Criminal Proceedings

In some, but not other, jurisdictions, the institution of a criminal prosecution against one who has feloniously obtained goods and converted them is a condition precedent to the bringing of trover against him.

In some,⁶⁶ but not other,⁶⁷ jurisdictions, the institution of a criminal prosecution against one who has feloniously obtained goods and converted them is a condition precedent to the bringing of trover against him. The institution of a criminal prosecution is not a condition precedent to the bringing of trover against a receiver of goods stolen in another state.⁶⁸

Failure to remove property

Where employee was notified that his connection with employer would be severed on a certain date, employee entered into agreement with employer to help dispose of certain of employer's property in order to raise money to pay employee's salary, and, when provisions of agreement were violated, temporary injunction was issued to enjoin employee from disposing of employer's property or going on employer's premises, employee's tools left on the premises after employment tertives liability on the part of defendant.⁷⁰ Absence of damage to plaintiff is a good defense,⁷¹ as is abandonment of the property by plaintiff.⁷² On the other hand, there are various matters which, regardless of whether or not they may mitigate the damages and be shown in evidence for that purpose, do not constitute a complete defense in bar of the action, such as good faith, as discussed supra §§ 8, 45, possession originally acquired in a lawful manner,⁷³ advice of counsel,⁷⁴ a bona fide purchase without notice,⁷⁵ a desire to protect the wife of plaintiff,⁷⁶ deceit practiced on defendant by a third person,⁷⁷ lack of profit or benefit to defendant,⁷⁸ benefits conferred by defendant on plaintiff by making voluntary payments on the obligations of the latter,⁷⁹ a proper sale of part of the goods,⁸⁰ or a license or agency which had been revoked or terminated.⁸¹

Other such matters include defendant's exercise of reasonable care in handling,⁸² or failure to use⁸³ the property after wrongfully taking it, the obtaining of possession by defendant under a Sunday contract,⁸⁴ lack of possession by defendant at the time of pleading,⁸⁵ an unreasonable excuse for withholding plaintiff's goods,⁸⁶ another conversion by defendant or a third person prior to the one alleged,⁸⁷ subsequent theft⁸⁸ or destruction⁸⁹ of the property, a subsequent fraudulent act on the part of defendant,⁹⁰ a settlement of a different claim against a third person,⁹¹ a settlement which was not fully carried out,⁹² indebtedness of plaintiff to defendant,⁹³ plaintiff's intention prior to the conver-minated were left at the employee's own risk and the employer was not liable for the tools.—H. & P. Mfg. Co. v. Hanson, Ark., 261 S.W.2d 800.

Prediction of future adjustments

The directors and officers of trust company from which plaintiff purchased undivided shares in two mortgages could not avoid liability for conversion, based on company's acceptance of a third mortgage on same property and entry into agreement consolidating all of mortgages, by prediction that on final foreclosure of consolidated mortgage the equities would be so adjusted that no advantage would be accorded trust company.—*Mendelson v. sion to use the property unlawfully,⁹⁴ plaintiff's breach or nonperformance of a contract,⁹⁵ or a partial failure of consideration.⁹⁶ Other matters include payment,⁹⁷ nonpayment,⁹⁸ or maturity after the institution, but before the trial, of the trover action,⁹⁹ of the promissory note alleged to have been converted; the failure of plaintiff to pay debts which he intended to pay by realizing on the property converted;¹ the acquisition by plaintiff of the check in question otherwise than in payment of any debts due him;² and negligence on the part of the plaintiff³ in not discovering,⁴ or giving notice of,⁵ the facts at an earlier date where it was not so gross as to imply consent⁶ and did not cause any loss to, or change of position by, defendant.⁷

Also, it is not a complete defense that plaintiff was only part-owner of the property⁸ or that the value of goods converted is not ascertainable;⁹ the assertion of a right other than that under which property was wrongfully taken or detained will not be allowed as a defense;¹⁰ plaintiff's right to recover should not be made to depend on the opinion of the jury as to whether he would, if the conversion had not occurred, have continued to comply with his contract with defendant;¹¹ and the delivery of a sum of money by a stranger to plaintiff as a mere agent to pay it over to another person does not discharge an instrument alleged to have been converted where it is not made or accepted with that object or purpose but rather under an agreement that plaintiff shall bring an action to recover for the conversion.¹² Since the value of commercial paper must depend largely on the integrity and business habits of those who issue it, the mere fact that the maker of a note, which has been wrongfully converted, has not sufficient property liable to execution to pay it cannot of itself be regarded as a good defense in an action of trover for its wrongful conversion.¹³ Where a chattel mortgagee converts property on which plaintiff has a prior landlord's lien, it is no defense that there remained on the landlord's premises other property of the lessee sufficient to satisfy the landlord's claim for rent.¹⁴

Acting under orders of superior officer will justify a conversion only when the orders and surrounding circumstances amount to duress.¹⁵

Defense set up by another defendant. Where the liability of defendants is both joint and several, a valid defense set up by one will be available for the others.¹⁶

Equitable defenses are admissible in trover,¹⁷ except where defendant obtained possession of the property tortiously.¹⁸ title to the property in controversy, a right of possession, or a rightful possession.

It is competent and proper for defendant in an action of trover to allege in himself as a defense either title to the property in controversy,¹⁹ a right of possession,²⁰ or a rightful possession²¹ in the absence of an intent to convert.²² Some claims of title, however, have been held insufficient to defeat an action of trover;²³ and title in defendant does not justify a conversion of personal property when it was in the custody of the law²⁴ or on the premises of another person.²⁵ Where defendant claims title by adverse possession, he must rely on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of plaintiff's title.²⁶

Subsequent acquisition of mortgage. Defendant cannot escape liability for a conversion by subsequently discharging and taking an assignment to himself of a mortgage on the goods involved in the action;²⁷ but he may defeat plaintiff, a second mortgagee, by buying in before the commencement of the action a first mortgage on which default had been made.²⁸

§ 85. — Title or Right of Possession of Third Person

Except in some jurisdictions, title in a third person is not a defense.

Except in some jurisdictions,²⁹ title in a third person is not a defense³⁰ unless defendant is in privity with, or connects himself in some way with the title of, such third person,³¹ or the conversion is in the wrongful detention and not in the taking,³² or plaintiff relies solely on his own title rather than on former possession or a mere right to possession.³³ It is a good defense that a third person has the right of possession³⁴ or where defendant came into possession lawfully, that he delivered the property to a third person entitled to possession.³⁵

§ 85. — Recovery, Restoration, or Offer to Restore Property

After an act of conversion has taken place and become complete, a return, restoration or tender of, or offer to return or restore, the property by the wrongdoer will not bar a cause of action in trover.

After an act of conversion has taken place and

Sale to defendant by agent of plaintiff

In action for conversion of timber cut and removed from owner's premises, where jury found that owner's brother sold timber and collected amount charged for stumpage and was general agent of owner, owner was bound by acts of his agent in collecting the agreed market price of timber received by defendants, and defendant is not liable in conversion.—McArthur v. Byrd, 195 S.E. 777, 213 N.C. 321.

Title after unwarranted rescission of sale

Where sale of mortgaged automobile was made with consent of the mortgagee and encumbrance was removed before there was any threat of loss to the plaintiff who took automobile in exchange for another, plaintiff's attempted rescission before first payment on note given as result of exchange became due, whether before or after payment of mortgage note was unwarranted, and he was not entitled to maintain trover, since the most that he could claim was a technical breach of warranty from which he suffered no damage, and would have suffered none if he had fully performed his contract.—Baranowski v. Linatsis, 57 A.2d 155, 95 N.H. 55.

become complete, a return, restoration or tender of, or offer to return or restore, the property by the wrongdoer, although provable in some cases in mitigation of damages, will not bar the cause of action in trover,³⁶ and, a fortiori, the cause of action is not barred by matters not constituting a good offer, tender, or return.³⁷ Likewise, plaintiff's recovery,³⁸ or opportunity to recover,³⁹ the property, otherwise than by legal proceedings or acceptance of a return, tender, or offer to return, is not a bar or complete defense to the action. Furthermore, where defendant transferred the property, a return of it by the transferee to defendant after the institution of the suit does not bar plaintiff's right of action for the initial conversion.⁴⁰ On the other hand, it is a defense that defendant tendered the property to plaintiff before there was any conversion⁴¹ or, where plaintiff is not the owner, that defendant surrendered possession to the true owner.⁴²

§ 87. — Other Legal Proceedings

It is a good defense that the property claimed to have been converted was seized under an attachment against the real owner, or where it is sought to show conversion by proof of a demand and refusal, that at the time of the demand, and up to the time of the commencement of the action, the fund in question was under order of court in garnishment proceedings.

§ 88. — Waiver and Estoppel

The right to sue in trover may be defeated by any act or conduct which amounts to an estoppel, and one otherwise entitled to bring an action of trover may afford the wrongdoer a complete defense to the action by waiving the right to treat the act as wrongful.

The right to sue in trover may be defeated by any act or conduct which amounts to an estoppel,⁵³ and one otherwise entitled to bring an action of trover may afford the wrongdoer a complete defense to the action by waiving the right to treat the act as wrongful.⁵⁴ The right may be waived by acts indicating a continued claim of ownership;⁵⁵ ratification of the tortious act;⁵⁶ provided plaintiff had knowledge of the material facts;⁵⁷ the receipt of the proceeds of defendant's wrongful act;⁵⁸ or by bringing an action for damages or assumpsit for the proceeds of the wrongful disposition of the property.⁵⁹ On the other hand, the facts in particular cases may not be sufficient to constitute an estoppel,⁶⁰ or waiver.⁶¹ A demand is not a waiver;⁶² the release of a maker of a note which has been converted will not discharge the person guilty of the conversion;⁶³ the acceptance of usurious interest unrelated to the conversion is not a waiver;⁶⁴ and a waiver of a conversion of part of the property is not a waiver of a conversion of the remainder.⁶⁵

Estoppel to set up defense. Defendant in trover will not be permitted to set up a defense inconsistent with his silence, language, or conduct whereby he induced plaintiff to act to his prejudice.⁷¹ It has been held that one who on demand admitted being in possession of goods and refused to give them up is estopped when sued in trover to allege that he did not have them at such time;⁷² but the contrary has also been held.⁷³

B. JURISDICTION, VENUE, PARTIES, AND PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS

§ 89. Jurisdiction

Since an action of trover is transitory, it may be brought in one state for a conversion of personal property in another state.

Since an action of trover is transitory, it may be brought in one state, for a conversion of personal property in another state;⁷⁴ and an action of trover may be maintained in one country for the conversion of personal property in another country.⁷⁵ Where land in one state is held adversely by defendant under claim and color of title, the courts of a second state have been held not to have jurisdiction of an action for the conversion of personalty severed from the land.⁷⁶ Jurisdiction, it has been said, will not be refused on the ground of public policy.⁷⁷

Since the action of trover is a creature of the common law and involves the right to trial by jury, it comes under the jurisdiction of the courts of law.⁷⁸ Although property of which conversion is alleged is in the custody of a chancery court, an action for its conversion may be brought in a law court, since it does not affect the possession of the property, or interfere with its custody.⁷⁹

§ 90. Venue

An action of trover is transitory in nature and, unless otherwise provided by statute, such action may be brought in any county where jurisdiction over the parties can be obtained.

An action of trover is transitory in its nature, and, unless it is otherwise provided by statute, an action of trover may be brought in any county where jurisdiction over the parties can be obtained, although the conversion was not committed in that county.⁸⁰ In some jurisdictions, however, the venue of actions of trover is fixed by statute.⁸¹ A conversion of property by two gives the owner a joint cause of action against them, and if they live in different counties, he may sue both in the county in which either resides.⁸²

Change of venue. Defendant may be entitled to a change of venue to the county where the cause of action arose where he shows by affidavit that there are witnesses material to his defense residing in that county.⁸³ A defendant, in an action for damages for property severed from the realty, cannot have a change of venue to a county in which the realty is situated on the ground that the action was for injury to the realty.⁸⁴

§ 91. Time to Sue and Limitations

The owner of personalty suing on a cause of action for conversion must bring his action within the period of limitations after the cause arose. Where the taking was tortious, the statute runs from the time of such taking, and, where there was an unlawful disposition after lawful acquisition, the statute commences to run from the date of the unlawful disposition.

An action for conversion of property is sometimes expressly made subject to limitation,⁸⁵ and the period necessary to create a bar to an action for conversion is prescribed by statute.⁸⁶ The owner of personalty suing on a cause of action for conversion must bring his action within the period of limitations after the cause arose.⁸⁷ The right of action for conversion arises when the act of conversion is complete,⁸⁸ and not until then.⁸⁹ This right of action accrues in favor of the owner of goods as soon as they are wrongfully taken from his possession or otherwise wrongfully converted.⁹⁰ Where the action has not been filed until the period of limitations manifestly has run, the action is barred in the absence of circumstances sufficient to indicate a tolling of the statute,⁹¹ although, where the statute must be specifically pleaded to be availed of, the statute is waived in the absence of such plea.⁹² When the conversion is once complete, a subsequent wrongful transfer does not alter the running of the statute from the original conversion.⁹³ Where the initial possession is lawful, as in subordination to the title of the owner, the statute does not commence to run while the relation of the parties continues unchanged and unrepudiated.⁹⁴ Accordingly, where a pledgee, sued for con-

Actions within limitations for conversion

Resale of automobile without knowledge of seller by buyer having right to possession thereof under conditional sales contract constituted "conversion" and not "theft" of automobile so that action by seller's assignee against purchaser from conditional buyer for value of automobile was subject to five-year statute of limitations applicable to conversion and not subject to one-year statute.—Eline v. Commercial Credit Corp., 209 S.W.2d 846, 307 Ky 77.

Actions not within limitations for conversion

(1) An action for infringement of a copyright is not an "action for the conversion of personal property" within the six year limitation statute.—Local Trademarks v. Price, C. A.Ala., 170 F.2d 715.

(2) Where owner placed diamond rings with agent for purpose of sale, agent, on about June 1, 1933, intrusted rings with another having in view a sale, the other proved to be a thief, rings were located in store of pawnbroker who refused to return rings without payment of loan secured thereby, agent promised to pay loan but did not return to store until August, 1934, and pawnbroker made auction sale of rings on March 12, 1935, owner's action of conversion instituted in October, 1935, was not barred by two-year statute of limitations.—James v. Klar & Winterman, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 625.

Attaching creditor against converter

Cause of action for damages does not accrue to attaching creditor against one converting part of attached property until sale of remainder has shown that creditor has not full satisfaction of judgment.—Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Andrews, Tex.Civ.App., 285 S.W. 894.

Period determined from time of actual knowledge

Under statutes forbidding mortgages to sell mortgaged property without consent of mortgagees or to dispose of mortgaged property with intent to defraud where chattel mortgagees first ascertained that mortgaged property had been sold by mortgagors when mortgagors failed to pay five of installment notes secured by mortgage, action for conversion brought within two years from date mortgagees acquired actual knowledge of conversion but more than two years after conversion was not barred by limitations since mortgagees were not required to exercise diligence to discover conversion but had a right to assume that property would not be disposed of in violation of law without their consent.—Melear v. E. A. Fretz Co., Tex.Civ.App., 155 S.W.2d 983, error dismissed.

Absence of assertion of ownership

Action for conversion of corporation's stock by officer's pledging thereof to secure private indebtedness held not barred by two-year limitation where pledgee asserted no unconditional ownership to stock until within two years of suit by corporation's bankruptcy trustee.—Klirby v. Acts held insufficient to be conversion or adverse possession

(1) Mortgagee's failure to reply to mortgagor's request for statement of balance due on mortgage debt, so that mortgagor might pay it, did not constitute assertion of mortgagee's ownership of mortgaged automobile and amount to conversion thereof so as to start running of two-year statute of limitations against mortgagor's action for conversion, but mortgagee's subsequent wrongful sale of automobile was only overt act amounting to conversion.—Ellis v. Heidrick, Tex.Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 293, error refused.

version of personalty, seeks to avail himself of the defense of limitations he must repudiate the relationship of pledgor and pledgee;⁹⁵ so also must a bailee⁹⁶ or a mortgagee⁹⁷ repudiate their contractual relationships.

If the holding or possession sounds in tort from the beginning, a demand and refusal are unnecessary for the purpose of determining when the statute of limitations begins to run.⁹⁸ Where the statute has already begun to run, no subsequent demand and refusal can start it afresh.⁹⁹ In the case of an illegal pledge of securities by a bank it has been held that, in the absence of a demand, the statute runs from the time of a subsequent sale,¹ while other authority holds that the statute runs from the time of the original illegal pledge.²

The rule of tacking two or more continuous and uninterrupted periods of adverse possession is applicable to chattels,³ and where the combined time thus covered exceeds the limitation period the owner's action for conversion is barred.⁴

§ 92. Parties Plaintiff

One who has title and right to possession is a proper party plaintiff, and joint owners of a chattel may join in an action for conversion.

A party with the requisite ownership or right to possession is a proper party to institute the action.⁵ Where there are several joint owners of a chattel it has been held that all of the owners should be joined as plaintiffs in trover.⁶ Other cases have held, however, that trover may be brought by one joint owner,⁷ if he has been duly authorized by his co-owners to sue.⁸ On the other hand, persons having no interest in the property converted are neither necessary⁹ nor proper¹⁰ parties plaintiff. One who has the title and right of possession need not join

(2) In suit to recover value of seven-eighths of oil produced by defendants from land in which plaintiffs claimed a leasehold working interest, where royalty owners intervened and defendants did not claim adversely with respect to portions of production claimed by them, the defense of limitations was not available to defendants as against royalty owners—*Marathon Oil Co. v. Repudiation and appropriation

To make defense of limitation available to pledgee sued for conversion of stock, repudiation of pledge and appropriation of stock, must be shown and must have continued for entire statutory period—Kirby v. Fitzgerald, Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 362, affirmed 89 S.W.2d 408, 126 Tex. 411.

Action sale as repudiation

Where stolen diamond rings had been pledged as security for loan, and owner's agent acquiesced in pledgee's possession of rings until paid agreed amount of original advancement, thereby creating relation of pledgor and pledgee, pledgee's auction sale of rings constituted repudiation of such relationship and at time of sale owner's cause of action for conversion accrued and the statute of limitations began to run—*James v. Action held not barred

A suit against a city for the conversion of securities of a national bank illegally pledged to the city to secure its deposits in the bank is not barred by limitations when brought within one year after a conversion of the securities by sale, as the city could not have been sued unless it refused to return the securities on demand or did something with them beyond keeping them safe.—City of Fort Worth v. McCamey, supra.

2. Ill.—O'Connell v. Chicago Park Dist., 34 N.E.2d 836, 376 Ill. 550.

Actions held barred

(1) Where bank pledged securities and the possession of the pledgee was wrongful and adverse to the rights of the pledgor bank from the beginning, the alleged conversion by subsequent sale of the securities related back to the time the pledge was made and therefore action for conversion, instituted more than five years after the pledge but less than five years after the sale, was barred as to both pledgee and pledgee's agent making sale and the "liability for successive conversion doctrine" was not applicable—O'Connell v. Chicago Park Dist., 34 N.E.2d 836, 376 Ill. 550, 135 A.L.R. 698.

(2) The right of a state bank's receiver to recover damages for conversion on ground of ultra vires pledge of bank's assets to secure deposit of public funds was barred by limitations when suit was brought more than five years after deposit was made, as against contention that no action accrued until after receiver was appointed and demanded return of securities—Albers v. Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co., 17 N.E.2d 66, 296 Ill.App. 592—Albers v. Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co., 17 N.E.2d 67, 296 Ill.App. 596.

with himself as plaintiff another who has a beneficial interest in the property.¹¹ A wife in whose custody her husband has left property during his temporary absence cannot sue in her own name for the conversion thereof, since her possession is that of her husband.¹²

Under a statute authorizing the joinder as plaintiffs parties interested in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded, where one plaintiff was the owner of the property at the time of the conversion and his coplaintiff was entitled to possession by virtue of an agreement between them, and each was entitled to an equal share of the profits from a sale thereof, they are properly joined as plaintiffs.¹³ Plaintiffs who deposit fungibles in a common storage wherein the fungibles are commingled with a common mass have a unity of interest sufficient to entitle them to sue jointly for an alleged conversion of such property.¹⁴ Where an action of trover was brought by a sheriff for goods levied on by him, it has been held that he need not sue as sheriff since the rule requiring a plaintiff to sue in the name of his office or in his special character applies only to those cases in which the action is peculiar to his office.¹⁵

§ 93. Parties Defendant

If the wrongful acts of each person guilty of conversion were separate and distinct, they cannot be sued jointly; but where the conversion is the joint act of several, all may be joined as defendants, although it is not necessary to join them.

If the wrongful act of each person guilty of conversion was separate and distinct, they cannot be sued jointly.¹⁶ Where the conversion is the joint act of several, all may be joined as defendants,¹⁷ and there is no misjoinder if the defendants are joint tort-feasors.¹⁸ However, it is not necessary to join them since the action may be brought against one alone,¹⁹ although the joint tort-feasors are partners,²⁰ as all persons engaged in a conversion are liable as principals.²¹

In an action against the president of a company for a conversion to his own use of funds collected by him, the company having no interest in the funds so converted is not a necessary party.²² A lessor of premises on which the property converted had been placed who did not participate in the wrong, and who in consequence incurred no liability, is not a necessary party,²³ and, likewise, one not the owner of the premises on which the converted property was stored and not otherwise interested in the controversy should be dismissed as a defendant to the action.²⁴ In an action by the seller of goods against one to whom the purchaser had executed a trust deed of the goods for the benefit of creditors, the beneficiaries are not necessary parties as they are sufficiently represented by the trustee,²⁵ nor is the purchaser a necessary party if he is insolvent, since the redress sought as to him would be fruitless.²⁶

The impleading of new parties defendant is improper in the absence of a showing that they might be liable to the original defendant in the event of a recovery by plaintiff.²⁷ A bank as custodian of a fund allegedly converted has been held to be a proper party defendant even though it had not been liable as a party to the conversion of the funds.²⁸ In trover, defendant cannot, by amendment to his answer equitable in its nature, have reformation of a written instrument on which he relies to define the character of his possession, without making the person, executing such instrument, a party.²⁹

§ 94. Bonds and Other Security

The mere fact that the defendant has a verdict does not constitute a breach of conditions of plaintiff's bond given to answer for all damages to the defendant by any illegal conduct of the plaintiff in commencing and conducting the action.

In an action on a bond given by plaintiff in trover in pursuance of a statute providing for such bond "to be answerable for all damages which the defendants may sustain by any illegal conduct in commencing and conducting the said action of trover," the mere fact that defendant in trover had a verdict does not constitute a breach of the condition of the bond.³⁰ Where statutes so provide, defendant in trover may be required to give bond for the production of the property.³¹ When defendant has given a bond and security for the production of personality, such personality may be delivered up to the sheriff, and the bond canceled in order to discharge the surety.³²

A declaration, petition, or complaint which alleges that the plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of property therein described and that the defendant converted it to his own use, and which states the value of the property, or alleges that the plaintiff has been damaged in a named sum, sufficiently states a cause of action for conversion.

A declaration, petition, or complaint which alleges that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of property therein described and that defendant converted it to his own use, and which states the value of the property, or alleges that plaintiff has been damaged in a sum named, sufficiently states a cause of action for conversion,³³ unless other averments are required by statute.³⁴ Although the code abolishes the distinction between different forms of action, a complaint for the conversion of property must still contain all the material allegations which were necessary at common law,³⁵ but it has been held that, in an action for the

(2) Allegations that plaintiff planted grape plants on land with owner's consent, that defendant purchased land at sale under federal court decree and took possession of land notwithstanding plaintiff offered to pay reasonable rent until plants could be transplanted, held not to state cause of action for conversion.—Consolidated Graphite Corporation v. Kelly, 150 So. 682, 227 Ala. 516.

(3) A complaint which set out an action of tort for conversion of stock against a corporation was held not to have stated a cause of action against individual defendants who were alleged to have assumed its liabilities, as liabilities were considered to be confined to those of a contractual nature.—Nicholson v. Sprague, recovery of the value of personal property converted, plaintiff need not state whether he is suing on a breach of contract or for trespass.³⁶ Furthermore, technical rules formerly applicable to common-law actions of trover cannot be applied under the statutes to defeat an action for conversion in which plaintiff states facts which, if true, entitle him to the relief asked.³⁷

Statutory forms. Where the declaration follows a form prescribed by statute, it is sufficient.³⁸

Conclusion contrary to statute. Where the action is based on a statute giving a right of action in trover to recover goods received contrary to its provisions, and providing that plaintiff shall allege that the property was converted contrary to the provisions of the statute, a declaration in the usual form for trover is insufficient; it must conform to the requirements of the statute, otherwise it will be fatally defective if an objection is made at the trial.³⁹

Negating defenses. In accordance with general principles of pleading, a complaint in trover need not negative possible defenses.⁴⁰

Surplusage. As in other civil actions, unnecessary allegations will not vitiate a pleading otherwise sufficient; they may be treated as surplusage and disregarded.⁴¹

Erroneous prayer for relief. In accordance with general principles, it has been held that, where the facts stated disclosed a good cause of action for conversion, plaintiff may recover as in such action, notwithstanding the relief asked for is the possession of the property, or its value.⁴²

b. Cure or Waiver of Defects

Insufficiencies of a petition or declaration may be supplied by the defendant's plea or answer, or they may be waived by the defendant's failure properly to object to them, or cured by the verdict or findings.

Insufficiencies of a petition or declaration may be supplied by defendant's plea or answer,⁴³ or may be waived by defendant's failure to demur,⁴⁴ or by trial of the cause as though the proper allegations were in the pleading.⁴⁵ Defects and insufficiencies of the declaration or petition may be cured by verdict or findings of the court.⁴⁶

§ 96. — Description of Parties

The general rules of pleading govern the plaintiff's description of parties in the declaration, petition, or complaint.

In trover for goods taken from his possession and converted, an officer need not name himself as such in his declaration.⁴⁷ The use of the term "assignee" after the name of plaintiff in a declaration in trover has been held merely descriptio personae.⁴⁸

§ 97. — Description of Property

In an action of trover, the declaration, petition, or complaint must describe the property converted. Ordinarily, a general description is sufficient.

In an action of trover, the declaration, petition, or complaint must describe the property converted,⁴⁹

otherwise it will be fatally defective.⁵⁰

In actions of trover, a less specific description of the property converted will suffice than where the action seeks a recovery of the property itself.⁵¹ While the property should be described with reasonable certainty,⁵² in order that the jury may know what is meant, and in order that defendant may be protected from another action based on the same grounds,⁵³ all that is required is that the property should be described with as much reasonable certainty as the nature of the case will permit,⁵⁴ and ordinarily a general description has been held sufficient.⁵⁵ The nature and kind,⁵⁶ and the quantity⁵⁷ or number⁵⁸ of the chattels converted should be stated. However, the courts construe liberally the descriptions of quantity, and will sustain the declaration whenever, by any reasonable intendment, it can be supposed the evidence may give certainty to terms ordinarily used in a loose and indefinite sense.⁵⁹

If the foregoing requirements as to kind and number, or quantity, are complied with, the pleading will ordinarily be held sufficient in the matter of description,⁶⁰ although the situs of the property at the time of its alleged conversion should also be stated if this is necessary to render the identification of the property reasonably certain.⁶¹

Money. In actions for the conversion of money, it has generally been held that a description of it in general terms will be sufficient,⁶² provided the description is such that the jury may know what money is meant, and defendant will be protected against another action based on the same grounds.⁶³ While a declaration describing the money converted as bank notes issued by designated banks and setting forth the number of the notes and the denomination of each will be sufficient,⁶⁴ such particularity has been held unnecessary. It is not essential that the declaration should "set out the money verbatim,"⁶⁵ as by specifically describing the bills, notes, or coins converted,⁶⁶ but it will be sufficient to state the aggregate amount converted.⁶⁷ There are, however, decisions which are not in accord with the principles just stated, it having been variously held that a description of bank notes without giving the names, numbers, or marks to identify them is insufficient,⁶⁸ that a description of bank bills as "certain current bank bills representing in all one hundred and fifty dollars in money, and of the value of one hundred and fifty dollars" is insufficient, but good after verdict,⁶⁹ and that the description "three thousand dollars, in United States treasury and national bank notes of various denominations and value, issued by virtue, and under authority of the laws of the United States" is defective, but is sufficient on motion in arrest of judgment after verdict.⁷⁰

Written instruments. In trover for a bond, bill, or note, it is not necessary to describe the instrument particularly.⁷¹ Thus, in declaring for the conversion of notes or bills, it is not necessary to state

their dates,⁷² or time of payment,⁷³ or the amount, if not known,⁷⁴ since plaintiff is not supposed to have them in his possession and any misrecital would be fatal to his action,⁷⁵ and since to require a specific description of each note sued on would be in effect to preclude plaintiff from bringing trover at all.⁷⁶ So, also, in an action of trover for a bond, it is not necessary to allege its date,⁷⁷ or number,⁷⁸ or the name of the person in whose name it was issued,⁷⁹ or to recite any part of it,⁸⁰ nor need authentication of the bonds be alleged, as it would be a matter of defense to show that they were not in a condition to be of value;⁸¹ but it has been held that the declaration must show who were the parties to the instrument.⁸² A declaration in trover for a deed, although failing to state the names of the parties thereto or the nature or boundaries of the estate thereby conveyed, is sufficient after verdict, as it must be taken that everything was proved on the trial necessary to enable plaintiff to recover.⁸³

Description of property in schedule annexed to declaration In at least one jurisdiction, by reason of long usage, a description of the property converted may be made in a schedule annexed to the declaration. The "untechnicality" of so doing, it was said, must yield to long usage.⁸⁴

§ 98. — Value

It is generally essential to allege the value of the property converted, or at least that the property is of some value, but where a proper allegation of the damages sustained is made, allegations of value are rendered unnecessary.

While it has been held that the declaration in trover need not state the value of the thing converted, although it is otherwise in detinue,⁸⁵ it has generally been held that it is essential to allege the value of the property converted,⁸⁶ or at least that the property is of some value.⁸⁷ It is not necessary to allege that the converted property had no market value in order to state a cause of action for the actual value thereof;⁸⁸ and it has been held that an allegation of the value of the property,⁸⁹ or that the property was of some value,⁹⁰ is rendered unnecessary where the declaration, petition, or complaint contains a proper allegation as to the amount of damages sustained.

§ 99. — Ownership, Possession, or Right to Possession

- a. Ownership
- b. Possession or right to possession
- c. Time of ownership, possession, or right to possession

a. Ownership

The declaration or complaint must show in the plaintiff a general or special ownership in the property converted at the time of the conversion.

The declaration or complaint must show a general or special ownership in the property converted in plaintiff⁹¹ at the time of the conversion, either by direct allegation or necessary inference from facts well pleaded.⁹² However, it is not necessary to negative title in defendant.⁹³

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁹⁴ it has been held that it is sufficient to allege ownership generally without stating how such ownership was acquired.⁹⁵ Such an averment is an affirmation of a fact, and is not open to the objection that it is a mere legal conclusion.⁹⁶ The precise nature of plaintiff's title, or what are the evidences of it, it has been said, are matters of evidence merely;⁹⁷ nevertheless, although it has been said that the practice of setting forth the evidence of facts showing ownership is a pernicious one,⁹⁸ plaintiff may, if he sees fit, set forth the facts showing his title and right of possession,⁹⁹ and if he does so, no express averment of ownership is necessary.¹ However, the averment of facts showing ownership must be clear and concise to a common intent.²

If the pleading purports to state the evidential facts, it must state them sufficiently to show a cause of action in plaintiff, otherwise it will be fatally defective.³ A statement of facts from which ownership by plaintiff is necessarily inferred will be sufficient; but ownership must be the necessary and inevitable inference from the facts stated.⁴ It is not sufficient to allege facts from which ownership may be inferred.⁵ A pleading which alleges facts insufficient to show ownership is not helped by the addition of a general averment of ownership,⁶ since the particular facts alleged will control.⁷

Since title to, or right of property in, a chattel will not alone support an action for its conversion, the declaration or complaint must allege that at the time the property was converted the plaintiff had possession or the right to immediate possession.

Title to, or a right of property in, a chattel will not alone support an action for its conversion, and in consequence the declaration or complaint must allege that at the time the property was converted plaintiff had possession or the right to immediate possession⁸ or state facts from which this will be legally inferred,⁹ and an allegation that plaintiff has title to the property converted is not sufficient.¹⁰

In actions for conversion it is necessary to allege ownership, possession, or the right of possession of the property converted in the plaintiff at the time it is alleged to have been converted.

In actions for conversion it is necessary to allege ownership, possession, or right of possession of the property converted in plaintiff at the time it is alleged to have been converted;¹¹ and a complaint for conversion which alleges ownership in the present tense instead of as of the time of the conversion is defective,¹² since it does not show that plaintiff was the owner or had any special interest in, or possession of, the property at the date of the conversion.¹³ It is not necessary to allege that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to possession of the property at the time of the commencement of the action;¹⁴ but an unnecessary allegation of this character will not vitiate a complaint which alleges ownership or right of possession in plaintiff at the time of the conversion.¹⁵

§ 100. — Property Subject of Conversion

The declaration, petition, or complaint must show that the property allegedly converted was personal property.

In trover for the conversion of a building, plaintiff must specifically aver a state of facts showing that it is personal property, since the law presumes that a building located upon a tract of land is a part of the land it occupies, and is therefore real property.¹⁶ It has accordingly been held that a petition in trover for conversion of a building erected on leased lands under agreement for its removal by the lessee at the expiration of the lease and on payment of rent, not alleging performance of such conditions, is insufficient to state a cause of action.¹⁷

§ 101. — Conversion

a. Necessity

b. Requisites and sufficiency

a. Necessity

Since the conversion of property is the gist of an action of trover, it is indispensable that the declaration, petition, or complaint should allege a conversion by the defendant.

Since the conversion of property is the gist of an action of trover, it is indispensable that the declaration, petition, or complaint should allege a conversion by defendant,¹⁸ either by direct averments of a conversion or by stating facts from which a conversion will be legally inferred.¹⁹ Merely alleging a breach of contract,²⁰ or a trespass,²¹ without alleging a conversion, is insufficient.

b. Requisites and Sufficiency

- (1) In general
- (2) Characterizing act as wrongful, unlawful, fraudulent or deceitful
- (3) Time and place of conversion
- (4) Loss of goods and finding by defendant

(1) In General

While averments as to conversion must be definite and certain, no particular form of words is essential in alleging a conversion, providing the fact of the conversion is sufficiently stated, and it has been generally held sufficient to allege in general terms that the defendant converted the plaintiff's property.

In accordance with general principles of pleading, the averment as to the conversion must be definite and certain,²² and it is not sufficient to allege conversion inferentially.²³ Indefiniteness and uncertainty, however, cannot be taken advantage of on general demurrer.²⁴ Nevertheless, no particular form of words is essential in alleging a conversion, provided the fact of the conversion is sufficiently stated.²⁵ It has very generally,²⁶ but not universally,²⁷ been held that it will be sufficient to allege in general terms that defendant converted plaintiff's property, and that it is not necessary to allege the specific act or acts which constitute the conversion, or the means by which it was accomplished. This was the rule at common law, and the codes have not changed it.²⁸

Nevertheless, unless it is forbidden by statute,²⁹ and although it has been characterized as a "pernicious practice,"³⁰ plaintiff may, if he prefers to do so, state the facts which constitute the conversion,³¹ in which event, if the facts so stated show a conversion, the declaration or complaint will be sufficient without characterizing such acts as a conversion or alleging in direct and positive terms that the property was converted.³² A complaint which not only alleges that defendant converted plaintiff's property, but sets out specific acts sufficient to constitute a conversion, is not objectionable.³³

If, however, the complaint purports to set out the acts constituting the conversion, it will be fatally defective when all the facts stated therein, if true, will not warrant a recovery;³⁴ and this is true although in addition thereto the pleading contains a general averment that there was a wrongful conversion. The specific facts alleged will control the general averment,³⁵ unless the statement of evidential facts is forbidden by statute, in which case the evidential matter alleged must be ignored and the complaint held sufficient.³⁶ If the pleader elects to state the facts constituting the conversion, he should state the facts concisely without the addition of irrelevant or redundant matter; and if such matter is inserted in the pleading, it will be stricken or regarded as surplusage.³⁷

(2) Characterizing Act as Wrongful, Unlawful, Fraudulent, or Deceitful

The approved forms of declarations in actions for conversion usually recite that the act was wrongfully or unlawfully done, although such an averment is not a necessity, since a charge that a person converted personal property belonging to another is a charge by implication of an unlawful act.

The approved forms of declarations in actions for conversion, it has been said, usually recite that the act was wrongfully or unlawfully done.³⁸ Such an averment, however, is unnecessary,³⁹ since to charge a person with converting personal property belonging to another is to charge him by implication with an unlawful act,⁴⁰ and if such allegation is made, whether considered a mere conclusion of law⁴¹ or not,⁴² it may be rejected as surplusage and the pleading upheld if otherwise it sufficiently states a conversion. On the other hand, if the complaint is otherwise insufficient to charge a conversion, a characterization of the act alleged as wrongful will not help it.⁴³

Fraud. It is not necessary to characterize the act of conversion as fraudulent⁴⁴ or deceitful,⁴⁵ since it is immaterial in an action for conversion whether the property be converted innocently or knowingly.⁴⁶

(3) Time and Place of Conversion

While it may depend on the statutes as to whether an allegation as to the time of conversion is necessary, it is generally held that the time should be alleged, but it is not essential to allege the precise time of the conversion. Allegations as to the place of conversion may be necessary.

In trover time is not of the essence.⁴⁷ Where so provided by statute, it is not necessary to allege the time of the conversion;⁴⁸ and it has been held that no allegation as to the time of conversion is necessary, although there is no statute so providing, the view being taken that the failure to show that the action was brought within the statutory period is a matter of defense;⁴⁹ however, it has generally been held that the time of the conversion should be alleged;⁵⁰ and statutes may expressly require it.⁵¹ It is not essential that the precise time of the conversion should be alleged.⁵² Every action for conversion, it has been said, must depend on its own particular facts as to how certain and definite an averment of the time of the conversion can be made.⁵³ It is necessary, and also sufficient, to state that the conversion occurred at a time prior to the commencement of the suit and within the time limited by statute for bringing actions of this character.⁵⁴

Place. While it may be necessary to allege the place of conversion as an element of the cause of action,⁵⁵ exactness in the statement of the place of the conversion is not a condition precedent to the right to recover for the conversion.⁵⁶

(4) Loss of Goods and Finding by Defendant

It is no longer necessary to allege that the property in suit was lost by the plaintiff and found by the defendant.

The action of trover was in its origin an action to recover damages against a person who had found goods and who had refused to deliver them on demand to the owner, as discussed supra § 64; but by a fiction of law this action was at length permitted to be brought against any person who had in his possession, by any means whatever, the personal property of another and who used it or refused to deliver it to the owner, the gist of the action being the conversion;⁵⁷ and, in consequence, it is not necessary to allege that the property in suit was lost by plaintiff and found by defendant.⁵⁸ Such an averment is immaterial and not traversable.⁵⁹

Where conversion is in terms alleged, it is not necessary that the declaration, petition, or complaint should also allege that a demand was made on the defendant for the property before instituting the suit and that he refused to deliver it.

Where conversion is in terms alleged, it is not necessary that the declaration, petition, or complaint should also allege that a demand was made on defendant for the property before instituting the suit and that he refused to deliver it,⁶⁰ and this principle applies although it may be necessary to show a demand and refusal for the purpose of establishing a conversion.⁶¹ This is on the theory that the ultimate fact to be pleaded is the conversion,⁶² and that the demand "is not a matter of pleading but of evidence."⁶³ Nevertheless, if the complaint shows that the possession was originally rightful, plaintiff must then aver a demand,⁶⁴ or something to obviate the necessity of a demand;⁶⁵ but it has been held that this requirement is satisfied by alleging in general terms a wrongful conversion of the property by defendant to his own use.⁶⁶

If the complaint assumes to set out the facts constituting a conversion, and the facts so stated do not show a conversion in the absence of a demand and refusal, the complaint will be fatally defective if it fails to allege a demand and refusal;⁶⁷ and this is true although the complaint contains a general averment that defendant converted the property, since the specific facts alleged will control the general averment.⁶⁸ If plaintiff alleges a demand and refusal, but omits to aver a conversion, the declaration is insufficient, the demand and refusal being only evidence of a conversion.⁶⁹

Alternative allegations. A complaint may allege an unlawful taking and conversion of personal property in one paragraph, and in another plead that, if it should appear that the taking was lawful, then the conversion occurred through a refusal to surrender the property.⁷⁰

Definiteness and certainty. If a demand and refusal are alleged, the averment should be definite and certain,⁷¹ but an insufficiency of a pleading in this regard cannot be reached by a general demurrer.⁷²

§ 103. — Damages

- a. In general
- b. Special damages
- c. Exemplary, punitive, or multiple damages
- d. Election between value at time of conversion and highest market value

a. In General

In an action for conversion, the declaration or petition should sufficiently allege the damages sustained.

In an action for conversion it is usual, although not always necessary, to allege that plaintiff was damaged in a certain sum.⁷³ A declaration or complaint which fails to show that the property was of some value, or that plaintiff had been damaged by reason of the unlawful conversion, is insufficient.⁷⁴ A declaration, petition, or complaint which alleges the value of the property without alleging that defendant sustained damages in a particular amount is sufficient,⁷⁵ although it has been said that it is proper and better pleading to aver that the conversion is to the damage of the owner.⁷⁶

Interest. Where interest is recoverable only as damages and not by reason of some statutory provision, the petition must demand interest.⁷⁷ It has been held, however, that, where the damages prayed for largely exceeded the amount recovered, interest may be recovered, although it was not specifically prayed for.⁷⁸

Amount recoverable as limited by amount claimed. Plaintiff cannot recover an amount of damages larger than the amount he has claimed.⁷⁹

b. Special Damages

In order to recover special damages in an action for conversion, such damages must be specially pleaded.

In accordance with general principles governing the law of damages, if it is sought to recover special damages in an action for conversion, such damages must be specially pleaded,⁸⁰ and the amount stated.⁸¹ In an action of conversion, it has been held that a claim of damages for injuries to a buyer's credit and reputation by a forcible entry and taking of goods from the buyer's store by the seller, whose title to some of the goods the buyer admitted, must be considered as a whole on a general demurrer to the petition, and that a demurrer is properly sustained.⁸²

c. Exemplary, Punitive, or Multiple Damages

The facts authorizing a recovery of exemplary or punitive damages must be pleaded.

ages are not recoverable in an action for conversion unless the facts authorizing the recovery of such damages are pleaded.⁸³ It is necessary to allege that the acts were willful or malicious or oppressive;⁸⁴ but a complaint which alleges the willful and malicious taking of property and the refusal to return it after repeated demands is sufficient to warrant exemplary damages as for maliciously retaining the property after demand.⁸⁵ A petition in an action for the wrongful seizure of household furniture which alleges the seizure of enumerated articles, and which sets forth insulting language of defendant and his agent at the time of the seizure, and which avers that defendant and his agent made divers other insinuations and charges, is not objectionable for failing to set forth with sufficient particularity the insulting language complained of.⁸⁶

Double or treble damages. To entitle one to recover double or treble damages for a conversion, under a statute providing therefor, he must make a demand therefor in his declaration or complaint,⁸⁷ and allege that he bases his claim on the statute,⁸⁸ in order to give notice to defendant of the extent to which he claims;⁸⁹ otherwise only actual damages are recoverable.⁹⁰

d. Election between Value at Time of Conversion and Highest Market Value

An election to take the value of the property at the time of its conversion or its highest market value between the time of the conversion and the return of the verdict may be made orally in open court.

Election to take the value of the property at the time of the conversion or its highest market value between the time of the conversion and the return of the verdict need not be pleaded but may be made orally in open court.⁹¹ An allegation that when the property was taken it was of a specified value is not an election to claim as the measure of damages the value of the property at the time, with interest, rather than the highest market value between the conversion and verdict, without interest.⁹²

tion of the property,⁹⁷ are permissible. Amendments may be allowed in respect of the date⁹⁸ and place⁹⁹ of the conversion, and the value of property,¹ and to correct the names or descriptions of the parties plaintiff;² and amendments by inserting an allegation of demand,³ or correcting allegations of demand not sufficiently positive and direct,⁴ are permissible. An amendment alleging that the conversion was willful and malicious is permissible,⁵ as is an amendment before trial reducing the amount of damages claimed.⁶ However, as in other actions, plaintiff will not be permitted by an amendment to introduce an entirely new cause of action.⁷

§ 106. Plea or Answer

- a. In general
- b. Under the codes

a. In General

At common law the general issue in trover is the plea of not guilty, which denies all which the plaintiff, in legal effect, alleges in the declaration, namely, property in himself and an illegal conversion by the defendant.

At common law the general issue in trover is the plea of not guilty.⁸ It denies all which plaintiff, in legal effect, alleges in the declaration, namely, property in himself and an illegal conversion by defendant.⁹ A special plea which amounts to the general issue is bad on special demurrer.¹⁰ There is a line of authority which repudiates all special pleas in trover going to the original cause of action.¹¹ A release is a proper subject of a special plea,¹² and it has been recognized that, in addition, the statute of limitations¹³ and a former recovery¹⁴ may be specially pleaded.

However, it has been recognized by other authorities that defendant may admit the property in plaintiff and the conversion alleged in the declaration and justify the conversion,¹⁵ or plead a special defense denying either the property or possession of plaintiff or the conversion,¹⁶ although it has been held that a special plea showing either property out of plaintiff or that there was no conversion, or showing both facts, would be bad on special demurrer as amounting to the general issue,¹⁷ and that a special plea denying the conversion,¹⁸ or plaintiff's property,¹⁹ or setting up title in defendant²⁰ or in a third person,²¹ or which shows merely a lawful receipt of the goods,²² or to the effect that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff,²³ is bad. The only legitimate plea, in any of these cases, it has been said, is the general issue.²⁴ In any event a special plea is good which admits that there once was a cause of action and sets up subsequent matter in discharge or avoidance.²⁵ Where plaintiff alleges wrongful conversion after defendant obtained the property, defendant may plead the manner in which possession was obtained.²⁶ A plea admitting the conversion is not sufficient where it pleads facts which do not justify it, but merely operate to reduce the damages.²⁷ The fictions of losing and finding alleged in the declaration are not traversable.²⁸

Definiteness and certainty. Rules applicable to pleadings in civil actions generally requiring definiteness and certainty in alleging material facts apply to special pleas in actions for conversion.²⁹ In a jurisdiction where recovery in assumpsit for money had and received for property converted is not permissible unless there has been a sale and reception of money, a plea in an action for conversion alleging that plaintiff had previously instituted suit in assumpsit against defendant, but which fails to allege a sale of the property by defendant before the institution of that action, is fatally defective.³⁰ Pleas undertaking to justify under legal process must describe the process with sufficient certainty to identify it,³¹ and a plea defective in this manner is demurrable.³²

Duplicity. As in other civil actions, the statement in the same plea of two or more grounds of defense renders the plea bad for duplicity.³³

b. Under the Codes

The general rules applicable to the defendant's pleadings in actions under the codes are applicable in actions for conversion of personal property.

The general rules applicable to defendant's pleadings in actions under the codes are applicable in actions for conversion of personal property.³⁴ As in other cases, an answer setting up new matter in defense must contain a statement of the facts relied on.³⁵ An answer is not subject to the objection of indefiniteness or uncertainty where sufficient matter is pleaded to render the precise nature of the defense apparent.³⁶ While facts should not be alleged argumentatively, it has been held that an answer alleging that the taking was with plaintiff's consent and in pursuance of an agreement to do so, although amounting to an argumentative denial, is not, for that reason, insufficient to withstand a demurrer, if otherwise good.³⁷

Answer in confession and avoidance is good if the facts alleged are such as to show that there was no such wrong as that alleged as the cause of action;³⁸ in order to constitute such an answer, the cause of action must be confessed,³⁹ although it need not be confessed precisely as alleged, but it is sufficient if the answer confesses a prima facie cause of action.⁴⁰

Defenses equivalent to, or provable under, general denials. In a jurisdiction in which a defense setting up new matter provable under a general denial is demurrable, a defense setting up an excuse for failure to deliver goods to plaintiff is demurrable where a general denial is pleaded.⁴¹ Where a general denial is pleaded, it is not error to strike pleas of special matter tending to show that the alleged conversion was not unlawful,⁴² or was justifiable.⁴³ A paragraph of an answer which is merely an argumentative denial of the conversion alleged, every material fact alleged being admissible under a general denial pleaded, is subject to a motion to strike, but is not demurrable under a code which does not make argumentativeness a ground for demurrer.⁴⁴

Partial defenses and matter in mitigation. When the code so requires, facts relied on as a partial defense must be expressly so pleaded.⁴⁵ An answer which sets up that a note and mortgage, the conversion of which was sued for, were barred by limitations alleges matter affecting the amount of damages and is bad where the facts are not expressly pleaded as a partial defense or in mitigation of damages as required by a code provision as to such matter.⁴⁶ Where an indeltnedness of plaintiff to defendant is a charge against the chattel alleged to have been converted, if defendant has wholly made away with plaintiff's property he must, in order to take advantage of the indeltnedness in defense, plead it in mitigation of damages.⁴⁷

Inconsistent defenses. In jurisdictions where the rule authorizing defendant to set forth in his answer as many defenses as he may have is held not to authorize the pleading of inconsistent defenses, the pleading of inconsistent defenses in actions of conversion is not permissible.⁴⁸

§ 107. — Amended, Supplemental, or Additional Pleas or Answers

The general rules governing amendments of answers or the filing of supplemental or additional pleas or answers in civil actions apply in actions for conversion.

The general rules governing amendments of answers or the filing of supplemental or additional pleas or answers in civil actions apply in actions for conversion.⁴⁹ Under such rules it has been held that a plea of the general issue may be amended by attaching a notice of the defense that the property was seized on process of creditors of one who has assigned the property to plaintiff.⁵⁰ An answer may be amended so as to allege that defendant had waived the conversion by bringing an action to recover the identical sum of money on an implied contract for money had and received.⁵¹ It has been held that it is not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse, after judgment, to permit defendant to amend his answer so as to allege the defense of election of remedies where defendant knew the facts thereof before the issues were made up.⁵²

Supplemental answer. Defendant may plead by way of supplemental answer that he acquired title to the property in controversy pending suit, such fact at least being material and relevant as being in mitigation of damages.⁵³

Additional plea. In Florida, where, by rule of court, the plea of not guilty raises no issue as to plaintiff's property in the goods, where defendant misapprehending his plea of the general issue has failed to file a special plea denying plaintiff's title to the goods, he may be given leave to file such plea at the trial even after the close of plaintiff's testimony.⁵⁴

§ 108. Replication or Reply and Subsequent Pleadings

It has been held that a replication is proper to a plea setting up matters in justification; under the codes, ordinarily, a reply is unnecessary where new matter is not set up by the answer.

It has been held that a replication is proper to a plea setting up matters in justification.⁵⁵ Under the codes, ordinarily, a reply is unnecessary where new matter is not set up by the answer;⁵⁶ and under a statute providing that new matter in an answer not pleaded as a part of a counterclaim is to be deemed controverted by the adverse party, as on a direct denial, plaintiff may, without reply, show that a bill of sale relied on by defendant in justification has been released.⁵⁷

Except as the code may otherwise provide, new matter in avoidance of the allegations of the answer must be specially pleaded.⁵⁸ If the reply purports to be addressed to the entire answer, it must be a complete answer to every allegation thereof.⁵⁹ It must not amount to a departure from the declaration or complaint.⁶⁰

§ 109. Issues, Proof, and Variance

In actions of trover for conversion the issues are determined by the pleadings.

The questions to be tried in an action for conversion of personality relate to ownership and right of possession and a wrongful taking by defendant.⁶¹

The issues are determined by the pleadings.⁶² An answer which denies plaintiff's ownership on information and belief is sufficient to place plaintiff's title in issue.⁶³ Where defendant admits a taking or withholding, the only issue for trial is the amount of damages which plaintiff suffered by such taking or withholding.⁶⁴

§ 110. — What Must Be Proved

In accordance with principles of general application, in actions for conversion, the plaintiff must prove every fact essential to his cause of action if put in issue.

In accordance with principles of general application, in actions for conversion, plaintiff must prove every fact essential to his cause of action if put in issue.⁶⁵

Ownership and right to possession. In order to sustain an action for conversion, plaintiff must prove property in himself, either general or special, and possession or the right to possession of the property converted at the time of its conversion.⁶⁶ If, instead of alleging ownership generally, he sets forth a particular title, it is incumbent on him to prove the particular title as alleged,⁶⁷ since defendant is only called on to look to the pleadings to see what he is required to meet.⁶⁸ If defendant denies plaintiff's title only as to certain particulars, the latter need not offer evidence as to other particulars.⁶⁹

Conversion. Plaintiff must prove the commission of such acts by defendant with respect to the property alleged to have been converted as amounted to a repudiation of plaintiff's title or to an exercise of dominion over the property.⁷⁰ Where it is shown that defendant converted the property to his own use, it is not necessary to prove that the taking was tortious, although it was so alleged; this averment may be treated as surplusage;⁷¹ and it has similarly been held that, where the declaration alleges, and the evidence establishes, a conversion, it is not necessary to prove a further allegation that plaintiff had lost and defendant had found the property, such statement also being surplusage.⁷² Proof of a demand and refusal is not essential to recovery if a conversion is otherwise shown,⁷³ as, for instance, where defendant denies plaintiff's title and sets up ownership and right of possession in himself,⁷⁴ or where an unlawful taking is established.⁷⁵

Where the circumstances of themselves do not amount to an actual conversion, plaintiff must show a demand and refusal prior to the commencement of the action,⁷⁶ and that at the time of the demand and refusal it was within defendant's power to give up the property.⁷⁷ A wrongful intent on the part of defendant is not an element of conversion, and, therefore, proof of wrongful intent is not necessary.⁷⁸ Where two or more persons are sued jointly for a conversion, a joint conversion must be proved.⁷⁹ Proof that the conversion took place on the date alleged in the declaration has been held unnecessary.⁸⁰

Property converted. Where the action is for the conversion of money, if the money be described as a specific lump sum of a certain value, the precise amount must be proved to have been converted, since the sum named is the only descriptive feature of the money.⁸¹ In trover for a note, where an unnecessarily particular description of it is given in the declaration, an entire failure of any proof, as to such needless averments, will not defeat the action.⁸²

Value of property and damages. While plaintiff will be entitled to nominal damages if an actual conversion is established, if he seeks to recover more than nominal damages, he must prove his damages,⁸³ and this is true even on default.⁸⁴ Plaintiff must prove the market value of the property at the time⁸⁵ and place⁸⁶ of conversion, and proof of what plaintiff paid for the property is insufficient.⁸⁷ Where there is no proof as to the value of the property converted, which proof is necessary to show the amount of damages, there can be no recovery.⁸⁸

Exemplary damages. In order to authorize a recovery of exemplary damages, plaintiff must introduce evidence showing a right thereto; merely alleging that the conversion was wrongful and malicious is not enough.⁸⁹

Justification or excuse for refusing to deliver constitutes matter of defense to be established by defendant, after a case of presumptive conversion has been made out by evidence of a demand and refusal.⁹⁰

§ 111. — Evidence Admissible under Declaration, Petition, or Complaint

In conformity with general principles of law, on evidence admissible under the pleadings, the plaintiff cannot, in an action for conversion, introduce evidence to prove another and different cause of action.

In conformity with general principles, plaintiff cannot, in an action for conversion, introduce evidence to prove another and different cause of action.⁹¹ Where joint liability for conversion is alleged against two defendants the allegation may be sustained by proof of such liability without reference to their partnership relation,⁹² or by showing a partnership relation without alleging it in the declaration.⁹³

Description of property. Under a declaration for the conversion of an article, a recovery may be had for the value of another article attached to it and essential to its use;⁹⁴ but it has been held that, under a declaration for a conversion of a "trunk containing sundry clothes," only the value of the trunk may be shown.⁹⁵ A declaration alleging the conversion of boots is not supported by proof of a conversion of unfinished boots, in process of manufacture.⁹⁶

Ownership. Under a general averment of ownership of property alleged to have been converted, plaintiff may show any interest in the property which will support an action for its conversion.⁹⁷ It has been held that a deed of assignment is admissible to show plaintiff's right to possession, although the petition alleged that possession was held under "a chattel mortgage or deed of trust" to secure certain debts.⁹⁸ Likewise, it has been held that, where the complaint, after alleging a mortgage of the goods to plaintiff and default thereon, also alleges a delivery of them to plaintiff by the mortgagor in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, there is no error in permitting plaintiff to make proof of his title simply as mortgagee.⁹⁹ So, in an action for conversion of a county warrant, an allegation that defendant, without authority, procured the clerk to issue the warrant to him, was sufficient, in the absence of a motion to make more specific, to let in proof as to the method used by defendant to procure the clerk to issue the warrant to him.¹ On the other hand, where plaintiff pleads a special title in the property, he cannot introduce evidence to prove a different title.² Where plaintiffs, suing for the conversion of property, claim its entire value, they cannot show, on defendants' counterclaiming for the keep of the property, an animal, that defendants were part owners.³

Conversion. A general averment of conversion is sufficient to admit any evidence on the trial of issue joined that tends to prove such conversion;⁴ but where the evidence concerns a matter not in issue the evidence should be excluded.⁵ Thus, under an allegation of conversion, it may be shown that possession of plaintiff's property was obtained by fraud,⁶ forgery,⁷ theft,⁸ conspiracy,⁹ or collusion between defendant and a third person,¹⁰ or that the property had been acquired in a lawful manner and then unlawfully withheld,¹¹ or unlawfully sold when so acquired.¹²

A general allegation of conversion will permit proof of several or successive conversions.¹³ Where the count is a general one, there is no rule of law which limits plaintiff's proof to one act of conversion.¹⁴ However, where the complaint alleges the conversion and sale of property and a demand for payment for it, evidence that plaintiff demanded the property which defendant refused and claimed as his own is incompetent and immaterial and fails to support the pleading.¹⁵

Damages and value of property. In order to recover exemplary or punitive damages, or special damages, such damages must be specially pleaded in actions for conversion; if this is not done plaintiff is not entitled to introduce evidence to establish exemplary or punitive damages,¹⁶ or special damages.¹⁷ On the other hand, evidence of loss of rental and loss of opportunity to sell, being alleged as special elements of damage in a declaration in trover for an article which was returned to plaintiff, is admissible as a proper subject of consideration in the assessment of damages.¹⁸

An allegation that property was of a certain value warrants proof of either the market or intrinsic value at the time and place of conversion.¹⁹ Where the property converted was kept for use and not for sale, it is not necessary to allege that it had no market value as a condition to the right to introduce evidence of actual value.²⁰ Where the complaint asks for the cash market value of the property converted, evidence of its value as junk is not admissible.²¹ controverting any fact which the plaintiff is required to prove in order to establish his cause of action.

Unless it is otherwise provided by statute or rule of court, under a plea of the general issue or general denial, defendant may introduce any competent evidence controverting any fact which plaintiff is required to prove in order to establish his cause of action.²² It has been said that the plea of the general issue puts in issue every matter which can be pleaded in bar except a release and the statutes of limitations,²³ and that it admits of almost any defense arising before the cause of action accrued.²⁴ A general denial puts in issue only the facts alleged in the complaint.²⁵

Want of demand prior to instituting suit. Failure of plaintiff to make demand for the property before instituting suit may be shown under the general denial, notwithstanding a statutory provision that an objection that no demand for the subject matter of the action was made before suit is unavailable unless expressly set up by way of the defense in the answer or replication, the statute having no application to actions for trover and conversion.²⁶

In trover against two defendants, as copartners, under a plea of not guilty interposed by both, either defendant can introduce any competent evidence tending to show his nonliability.²⁷

b. Property and Right to Possession

It is generally held that a plea of the general issue or general denial puts in issue the plaintiff's ownership of the property and his right to possession.

Except where it is otherwise provided by statute or rule of court,²⁸ it has almost universally been held that the plea of the general issue or general denial puts in issue plaintiff's ownership of the property and right to possession and permits defendant to introduce any competent evidence which will overcome such allegations,²⁹ although there is also some authority to the contrary.³⁰

Title in defendant or third person. Unless otherwise provided by rule of court or statute, it has very generally been held that under a plea of the general issue or a general denial defendant may show title in himself or a third person,³¹ although intimations to the contrary are found in some decisions.³²

Fraud or usury in acquisition of plaintiff's title. The general rule recognized by the weight of authority is that, under the general issue or general denial, defendant may show that plaintiff's acquisition of title or ownership of the property alleged to have been converted was fraudulent,³³ the rule being subject to the limitation that if plaintiff sets out the source of his title, fraud in the acquisition thereof cannot be shown without pleading it,³⁴ or giving notice that defendant intends to attack the title for fraud by attaching such notice to the plea of the general issues.³⁵ On the other hand, in some jurisdictions it is held that fraud in the acquisition of title by plaintiff of the property alleged to have been converted cannot be shown unless specially pleaded,³⁶ and in other jurisdictions the decisions on this question are apparently not in harmony.³⁷

c. Conversion

Under a plea of the general issue or general denial, the defendant is entitled to show that he did not convert the property.

Under the general issue or general denial, defendant is entitled to prove any state of facts tending to show that he had not converted the property.³⁸ Thus, defendant may show that the property had never been received by him;³⁹ that, although he took the property, the taking was with plaintiff's consent and in pursuance of an agreement between the parties;⁴⁰ that he had a valid excuse for failure to deliver the property on demand, thereby repelling any inference of conversion deducible therefrom;⁴¹ that the taking was not wrongful but by authority of law;⁴² that title to plaintiffs had been vested in defendant by proceedings before a justice of the peace under a statute relative to animals suffered to run at large;⁴³ or that animals had been seized and destroyed in accordance with statutory authority because they were afflicted with an infectious and contagious disease.⁴⁴

d. Justification under Judicial Proceedings

Justification under judicial proceedings generally cannot be shown under the general issue or general denial.

According to some decisions it cannot be shown under the general issue or general denial by way of justification that the property was seized and sold under execution either against plaintiff⁴⁵ or against a third person.⁴⁶ It has been held that this defense, in order to be available in favor of either the officer seizing the property⁴⁷ or of plaintiff in execution,⁴⁸ must be specially pleaded. Likewise, it has been held that defendant cannot justify the taking of the property by virtue of an execution against a third person under a plea of the general issue unless notice of such defense is attached thereto.⁴⁹

Under statutory provisions it has been held that, where defendant seeks to justify on the ground that plaintiff's property had been attached and sold under execution in an action brought in another state before a justice of the peace by himself and other creditors of plaintiff, the answer must set out facts showing the jurisdiction and authority of the justice to render such judgment.⁵⁰ Other decisions have held that, in an action against a sheriff,⁵¹ or against a sheriff and execution plaintiff,⁵² for seizure and sale of plaintiff's property as that of a third person, defendants may, under the general issue, show an execution and judgment, and a special plea of justification is not necessary. It has further been declared that a special plea setting up a sale under execution against a third person is irregular, the view being taken that it is not permissible to plead a justification unless it admits the property to be

Fraud and breach of contract

Neither fraud nor breach of contract are relevant in an action of trover for the conversion of property which merchandiser had allegedly delivered to a fabricator for processing.—Kruegar Corp. v. Detroit Trust Co., C.C.A. Mich., 210 F.2d 152.

37. In New York

(1) It was held in one decision that, in an action for an alleged wrongful taking and conversion of chattels, where plaintiff claimed title to the chattels by virtue of a bill of sale by her husband to M. and another bill of sale thereof by the latter to her, evidence that such bills of sale were a sham and fraudulent, and that there was really no sale and delivery, may be admitted under a general denial.—Tum Suden v. Jurgens, 66 N.Y.S. 452, 32 Misc. 660.

(2) In another that defendant cannot show under the general denial that bill of sale under which plaintiffs claimed title was in fraud of creditors.—Boyle v. Williams, 20 N.Y.S. 727, 1 Misc. 112.

(3) In still another that, when a vendor is sued in trover by the vendee for retaking a part of the goods sold, he must plead his right of rescission of the contract of sale on the ground that he had been induced to enter into it by fraud in order to avail himself of this fact as a defense.—*McLeod v. in plaintiff, and the conversion, but justifies the latter.⁵³

Attachment. The decisions are apparently uniform in holding that seizure by virtue of a writ of attachment of property either as belonging to plaintiff, or to a third person, cannot be shown as a defense to an action for its conversion, either by the officer making the attachment or by the attaching creditor, under a plea of the general issue or a general denial, but the defense must be specially pleaded.⁵⁴

e. Distress for Rent or Taking Animals Damage Feasant

The taking of property as distress for rent, or taking of animals damage feasant may be shown under the general issue.

According to the weight of authority, the taking of animals damage feasant⁵⁵ may be shown in bar of an action for conversion under a plea of the general issue; and it has further been held that a special plea that the property alleged to have been converted was seized as a distress for rent is bad as being in contravention of rules stated supra § 106, which condemn special pleas which do not confess and avoid the conversion,⁵⁶ and which amount to the general issue.⁵⁷ There are, however, decisions which are not in accord with this view and which hold that a special plea that defendant seized animals alleged to have been converted damage feasant admits the property in plaintiff, and the conversion, justifies the latter, and is a good plea in confession and avoidance.⁵⁸

f. Waiver or Ratification; Estoppel

Various decisions have allowed or refused to allow a showing of waiver, ratification, or estoppel, under a plea of the general issue or general denial.

In some jurisdictions it is held that waiver of the conversion may be shown under the general issue or general denial,⁵⁹ as, for instance, a waiver by the institution of a prior action of assumpsit;⁶⁰ but in other jurisdictions it has been held that such waiver must be specially pleaded to be available as a defense.⁶¹ In one jurisdiction it has been held that subsequent ratification by plaintiff of the acts constituting the conversion may be shown as a defense under a plea of the general issue;⁶² but in another jurisdiction it has been held that ratification constitutes new matter which must be pleaded in order to be available as a defense.⁶³

Estoppel. According to some decisions, an estoppel, to be availed of as a defense in an action of trover, need not be specially pleaded but may be shown under a plea of the general issue or general denial.⁶⁴ Others, however, hold that estoppel is not available unless set up in the answer as a special ground of defense.⁶⁵

g. Value of Property and Damages

The value of the property, and damages, may be shown under the general issue or general denial.

The general issue or general denial puts in issue the value of the property at the time of the conversion,⁶⁶ and defendant is entitled to prove any facts in reduction of damages.⁶⁷ Where the unlawful conversion consists in cutting timber, it may be shown under the general denial in mitigation of damages that the trespass was not willful but was committed under the honest and reasonable belief in the right to do the act.⁶⁸

§ 113. — Evidence Admissible under Plea of Not Possessed

The almost universal rule in America permits defendant under a general denial to introduce evidence denying ownership or right to possession of the property in plaintiff. This rule is discussed supra § 112.

§ 114. — Evidence Admissible under Answer of New Matter

Where an answer sets up new matter by way of defense, any competent evidence which is relevant and material is admissible.

Where an answer sets up new matter by way of defense, any competent evidence which is relevant and material is admissible.⁶⁹ Thus, where the validity of a chattel mortgage by which plaintiff claims is attacked by defendant because fraudulent and void as to him, defendant may show that creditors who are shown by the mortgage, which is made an exhibit to the answer, to have accepted it, did not in fact do so;⁷⁰ and in an action for conversion of an animal under an answer justifying the taking of animals by defendant under his authority as poundmaster, setting out the ordinance under which he acted, any pertinent and relevant evidence tending to establish the defense is admissible.⁷¹

In actions for conversion, proof adduced either by the plaintiff or the defendant in order to be effectual must correspond substantially with the allegations of the pleadings.

In accordance with general principles, proof adduced either by plaintiff or defendant in order to be effectual must correspond substantially with the allegations of the pleadings.⁷² There can be no recovery in an action for conversion on evidence which establishes another and different cause of action,⁷³ especially on a cause of action inconsistent with the one alleged.⁷⁴ Thus, there can be no recovery where the evidence established a contract and a breach thereof instead of a conversion,⁷⁵ or a mere breach of duty on the part of defendant,⁷⁶ or an equitable cause of action,⁷⁷ since this amounts to a failure of proof of the cause of action alleged.⁷⁸ There can be no recovery for a conversion other than the one alleged,⁷⁹ or for a conversion of property other than that described in the declaration or petition.⁸⁰ Where defendant has alleged a particular ground of defense, he is not entitled to defend on another and different ground.⁸¹ However, it is only variances of a substantial character, such as are calculated to surprise and mislead the opposite party to his prejudice, which will be fatal to a recovery; immaterial variances will be disregarded.⁸²

Time and place of conversion. In accordance with general principles of pleading, it has very generally,⁸³ but not universally,⁸⁴ been held that, in actions for conversion, allegations as to time of conversion are immaterial, and it is not necessary that the proof should be in strict conformity with the averment as to the date of the conversion;⁸⁵ and that a variance in proof as to date, if the conversion be shown to have been committed prior to the commencement of the action,⁸⁶ and within the period fixed by the statute of limitations for bringing such actions,⁸⁷ is immaterial.

Plaintiff's averments as to place or county where the conversion occurred are immaterial, and if one county is alleged and another proved, the variance is not fatal,⁸⁸ at least if it was not shown that the tort was committed within a different jurisdiction.⁸⁹

Ownership. An allegation that the property converted was "the property of the plaintiff" is supported by evidence showing that plaintiff had a mortgage title to the property.⁹⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that there is a fatal variance between an allegation of ownership in plaintiff and proof that he was joint owner with another,⁹¹ and that there is a fatal variance between an allegation in an action brought by plaintiff for the benefit of another that plaintiff was the owner of the property at the time of the conversion and proof that the beneficial plaintiff was such owner.⁹²

§ 116. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In actions for conversion the plaintiff has the burden of establishing the material allegations of his complaint, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove every fact essential to his right to recover.

In actions for conversion the burden of proof is on plaintiff to prove every fact essential to his right to recover,⁹³ except such facts as are admitted,⁹⁴ and the burden does not shift to defendant,⁹⁵ although plaintiff has made out a prima facie case.⁹⁶ If defendant places his defense on the insolvency of a third person, it is incumbent on him to prove it.⁹⁷ In an action against persons jointly and severally liable for conversion, the burden of proving that a recovery against one has been followed by payment is on defendant.⁹⁸

Presumptions as to particular matters are discussed infra §§ 117-121.

§ 117. — Title, Ownership, and Right of Possession

- a. Presumptions
- b. Burden of proof

a. Presumptions

As a general rule, possession is presumptive evidence of title; but a possession which is shown to be permissive in its inception raises no presumption of title, unless the possession is shown to have been adverse.

Facts required to be proved by plaintiff in particular instances

(1) In action by partnership for alleged conversion of horses and corn sheller on which partnership held a lien, partnership had burden of proving alleged purchase and payment of price to representative of bank by which payments were to be credited to partnership's account.—Shimp Bros. v. Place, 281 N.W. 471, 225 Iowa 1098.

(2) Where a state livestock inspector, acting on belief that a cow which had been sold by plaintiff had been stolen, performed his statutory duty of impounding proceeds of sale pending determination of ownership of cow or right to proceeds, the inspector's action did not authorize an action for conversion of proceeds, at least until such time as plaintiff submitted satisfactory proof of his ownership of cow or legal right to proceeds of sale.—Bohart v. Songer, 101 P.2d 64, 110 Mont. 405.

(3) In suit for conversion of wheat, plaintiff had burden of establishing number of bushels of wheat appropriated by defendant.—Moore v. Conway, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 954.

Right to recover damages

In trover action, plaintiff must establish right in himself to recover damages.—Harvey v. Anaconda, 184 A. 889, 134 Me. 245.

Facts required to be proved by defendant

Where plaintiff alleged misappropriation by defendant of proceeds of the sale of a mortgage bond by relative occupying a fiduciary relationship to plaintiff, after relationship of parties and circumstances under which plaintiff parted with proceeds was shown, defendant had the burden to show affirmatively that no deception was practiced, no undue influence was employed, and that everything was fair, open, voluntary and well understood.—Arakjanian v. Arakian, 48 N.Y.S.2d 501, 268 App.Div. 41.

Effect of denials by defendant

In action by administrator of deceased payee's estate against maker for wrongful conversion of note, where maker denied that note constituted a part of payee's estate, or that he had converted the note, or that he had wrongfully withheld or retained the note, administrator had burden of proving such facts, though maker did not file a plea of non est factum, and by other paragraphs of the answer maker set up affirmative defenses of payment and gift.—Foudy v. Daugherty, 76 N.E.2d 288, 118 Ind.App. 68.

dence of title.⁹⁹ A possession which is shown to be permissive in its inception raises no presumption of title, unless the possession is shown to have been adverse;¹ and where the property of plaintiff has once been established, possession by defendant will not draw after it presumptive evidence of ownership, such as will excuse him from proving title.² Where plaintiff shows generally his ownership and right of immediate possession, the presumption is that he continued to be the owner with right of possession until the contrary is shown.³ It will be presumed that a consignee is the owner of the goods shipped;⁴ and that a father, instead of his unmarried son who lived with him, is the owner of chattels on the premises;⁵ and plaintiff's testimony, received without objection, that he owned the property raises a presumption that such ownership was legal in the absence of countervailing evidence.⁶

Possession. A possession of the goods in defendant at the time they were demanded of him nearly a year after he sold and boxed the goods for shipment will not be presumed in the absence of evidence as to what became of them.⁷ Where a part of the allegedly converted property is found in the possession of defendant a presumption arises that he acquired possession and appropriated the owner's property in its entirety;⁸ and such presumption is not rebutted by defendant's testimony that he had no idea how the parts came into his possession.⁹ Where the evidence does not warrant it no inference will be indulged in to the effect that defendant had possession of the alleged converted property.¹⁰

b. Burden of Proof

- (1) Title or ownership
- (2) Possession or right to possession

(1) Title or Ownership

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that he has either a general or special property in the goods; he must show title or ownership in himself of the property involved.

Better title than defendant

In action for wrongfully taking automobiles, wherein defendants denied that plaintiff had any title to automobiles and asserted title in themselves, plaintiff had burden to show a better title to automobiles than defendants had.

mains throughout the entire trial,¹³ and is not shifted to defendant on the making of a prima facie case of ownership in plaintiff.¹⁴ Where a prima facie case has been made out for plaintiff, the burden is on defendant to establish such matters of defense as that plaintiff's title to the property was void as having been acquired in fraud of his vendor's creditors;¹⁵ or that title to the property is in defendant,¹⁶ or in a third person with whom defendant so connects himself that he can stand on his right;¹⁷ or to overcome the presumption of title arising from possession.¹⁸ Where title in plaintiff's ancestor is admitted, recovery can be defeated only by proof that such title has been divested.¹⁹

Where the property converted is a negotiable instrument, if defendant desires to defend on the ground that he is an innocent holder for value, the burden is on him to establish this fact,²⁰ and, if he is asserting title in his predecessor, that the latter was a bona fide holder.²¹

(2) Possession or Right to Possession

In order to maintain an action for conversion, the plaintiff must show that at the time of the conversion he was in possession of the property, or was entitled to the immediate possession thereof.

In order to maintain an action for conversion, plaintiff must show that at the time of the conversion he was in possession of the property, or was entitled to the immediate possession thereof.²² Where plaintiff's right to possession depends on a condition, he must show a compliance with the condition.²³ It is not incumbent on defendant to prove that he never had possession of the property, at least until plaintiff makes a prima facie case tracing the property into defendant's hands.²⁴ It has been held that where plaintiff has proved his ownership and loss of the property, the burden then shifts to defendant to show that he came into possession of the property under such circumstances as to relieve him from liability for a conversion.²⁵

§ 118. — Conversion

- a. Presumptions
- b. Burden of proof

a. Presumptions

Conversion may be inferred from the taking of property and neglect to return it; and a defendant's refusal to surrender another's property, when called on to do so, affords a presumption that he has converted it to his own use, but this presumption is rebuttable.

a failure of a bailee to deposit in a bank money which was given to him for that purpose;²⁹ or where one having possession of property, and knowing that he has no claim to it, withholds it from the true owner, he may be presumed to have assented to the wrongful act of another by which such possession was obtained;³⁰ but a bare possession of another's property will not be presumed to be tortious.³¹ It has been said that no presumption arises that defendant converted the entire amount of chattels lost because an insignificant portion thereof was seen to be taken away by his employees.³²

Intention to convert. A legal presumption arises that one who takes or converts to his own use the property of another intends to do so,³³ and a jury may lawfully infer that such a wrongdoer had knowledge of the right and title of the owner of the property which he appropriated, and that he intended to convert it to his own use from his reckless disregard of the owner's right and title, unless the presumption is overcome by evidence of his innocence and good faith.³⁴

Place of conversion. In the absence of evidence to show where an alleged conversion of stock by a corporation having offices only in two states was committed, the presumption arises that the stock was converted at the company's office in one of these two states and not in another state, so as to render its law applicable.³⁵

Time of conversion. In the absence of proof as to the date of the conversion of property, the presumption is that it was as of the date of taking the property into possession.³⁶

b. Burden of Proof

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show a conversion of the property involved; and he must show either an actual conversion, or demand for, and refusal of, the property where this is relied on to establish a conversion.

The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show a conversion of the property involved;³⁷ and in order to establish a conversion, plaintiff must prove some affirmative wrongful act,³⁸ since, as discussed supra § 4, acts alleged to constitute a conversion must be positive and tortious and not a mere nonfeasance, or neglect of some legal duty, or a mere breach of contract. He must show either an actual conversion,³⁹ or a demand for, and refusal of, the property where this is relied on to establish a conversion.⁴⁰ In the latter case, according to the weight of authority, it is also necessary for plaintiff to show that at the time of the demand and refusal defendant had control of the property so as to be able to comply with the demand;⁴¹ but there are also decisions which are apparently in conflict with this rule.⁴² Where, however, conversion is otherwise established, proof of demand and refusal is not necessary.⁴³

Consent to possession of property
In trover, where property has come into possession of defendant by plaintiff's consent, and plaintiff relies on wrongful detention, plaintiff has burden of showing demand by plaintiff and refusal of defendant to deliver possession.—Clay County Abstract Co. v. McKay, 147 So. 407, 226 Ala. 394.

Unlawful detention of property

In trover for conversion of plaintiff's property in defendant's lawful possession, plaintiff was bound to prove defendant's unlawful detention thereof.—Mueller v. Technical Devices Corp., 84 A.2d 620, 8 N.J. 201.

Aiding in conversion. Where plaintiff brings action against a party for damages for aiding in the conversion of his property, it is incumbent on such plaintiff to show that the party charged with aiding in the conversion had actual notice of plaintiff's rights, or had actual notice of the infirmity in the title of the party defendant is charged with aiding in the conversion, before he is entitled to recover a personal judgment for damages.⁴⁴

Intent. In order to establish a conversion, it is incumbent on plaintiff to show an intention or purpose to convert the goods and to exercise ownership over them, or to prevent the owner from taking possession of his property.⁴⁵

§ 119. — Identity

The general rules as to presumptions and burden of proof in actions for conversion apply in identifying property.

Identity of plaintiff's property as that taken by defendant will be presumed where defendant refused to let plaintiff examine it to ascertain whether it belonged to him.⁴⁶ Plaintiff has the burden of proving the identity of the property converted;⁴⁷ and also the burden of proving that the articles alleged to have been converted were personalty.⁴⁸

§ 120. — License

Although there is authority to the contrary, it has been held that one who cuts timber on adjoining land is presumed to have a license or authority therefor from the owner.

It has been held that a tenant of timber land who cut trees on adjoining land will be presumed to have license or authority therefor from the owner of the latter tract;⁴⁹ but there also is authority to the contrary.⁵⁰

§ 121. — Damages and Value

- a. Presumptions
- b. Burden of proof

a. Presumptions

Ordinarily, the damage caused by the wrongful conversion will be presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion; and in the absence of other evidence, property converted by a wrongful sale will be presumed to be worth the price received for it.

Ordinarily, the damage caused by the wrongful conversion will be presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion.⁵¹ In the absence of other evidence, property converted by a wrongful sale will be presumed to be worth the price received for it.⁵²

As to value of choses in action. In trover for the conversion of choses in action, such as promissory notes, bills of exchange, checks, drafts, bonds, corporate stock, or other evidences of indebtedness, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the value of the instrument is its face value;⁵³ although, as discussed infra § 130, this presumption may be rebutted by evidence that the instrument is worth less than its face value, or that in fact it has no value. It has been held that it will be assumed in the absence of evidence, that the sale price of converted stock of fluctuating value between the date of conversion and the date the owner learned thereof did not exceed the highest sale price on the date the owner learned of the conversion.⁵⁴ The ability of the maker to pay a note will be presumed until the contrary is proved;⁵⁵ and a presumption exists that the maker of the note will pay it.⁵⁶

The plaintiff has the burden of proving the damages sustained by him, and for this purpose he must show the value of the property; the burden is on the defendant to prove facts which will authorize a reduction or mitigation of the damages claimed.

Plaintiff has the burden of proving the damages sustained by him,⁵⁷ and for this purpose he must show the value of the property,⁵⁸ or of his special interest therein, which is necessary⁵⁹ and sufficient⁶⁰ to fix the limit of defendant's liability; and if special damages are claimed for expenses incurred in pursuit of the property, defendant must establish the value of the time and the reasonableness of the expenses.⁶¹ While it has been said that proof that the property had no market value is not a condition precedent to the recovery of actual value thereof by the owner,⁶² there is authority to the effect that it is incumbent on parties to produce evidence of market value, where property has market value,⁶³ and that where market value of property is pleaded and the evidence shows that there is a market for such property, plaintiff is required to prove the market value.⁶⁴

In order to recover the value of the property converted the owner is not required to show what dispositions he would have made had the conversion not occurred,⁶⁵ and if the wrongful detention of property causes the owner to lose a ready market, the damage is recoverable, without necessity for proof that the owner would have availed himself of that market but for the wrongful detention.⁶⁶ Where it is shown that defendant is withholding the property and refused to surrender it to plaintiff on demand, it is not necessary to plaintiff's recovery of damages for conversion to show that defendant has actually used any part of the property.⁶⁷ In an action for the conversion of a draft, it is not necessary for plaintiff to show the solvency of the drawee or acceptor.⁶⁸

Matters in reduction or mitigation of damages.

The burden is on defendant to prove facts which will authorize a reduction or mitigation of the damages claimed.⁶⁹ If defendant claims a reduction of damages by reason of his good faith in committing the conversion, the burden is on him to establish this fact.⁷⁰ If it is claimed that the property was damaged when converted, the burden rests on defendant to prove it.⁷¹ While in actions of trover for conversion of choses in action, such as notes, bills of exchange, drafts, or other evidences of indebtedness, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the value of the instrument converted is its face value, if defendant claims that the instrument is worth less than its face value, or is worthless, he has the burden of establishing this fact.⁷² A statute providing that the

§ 122. Admissibility

Evidence otherwise competent is admissible if it tends to prove or disprove a material allegation or denial of either party's pleading.

Evidence otherwise competent is admissible if it tends to prove or disprove a material allegation or denial of either party's pleading;⁷⁴ and is inadmissible if it does not in some degree sustain or defeat one or more of the issues presented for decision.⁷⁵

§ 123. — Existence, Identity, and Description of Property

Evidence relating to the existence or nonexistence, identity, description, or quantity of property in controversy is admissible.

Evidence of any fact which relates to the existence or nonexistence,⁷⁶ to the identity,⁷⁷ to the description,⁷⁸ or to the quantity⁷⁹ of property in controversy, which is alleged to have been wrongfully converted, is admissible. Similarly, evidence as to the location of the area in which the alleged conversion occurred is admissible.⁸⁰

Evidence of any unauthorized act of dominion over the plaintiff's property, or participation therein, by the defendant, either on behalf of himself or another or through the agency of another, is relevant to the issue of conversion, and, therefore, admissible.

Evidence of any unauthorized act of dominion over plaintiff's property, or participation therein, by defendant, either on behalf of himself or another or through the agency of another, is relevant to the issue of conversion, and, therefore, admissible,⁸⁷ if the acts sought to be proved occurred before the suit was commenced, but evidence of acts committed after the commencement of the suit is not admissible to prove a conversion.⁸⁸ Where plaintiff has proved conversion by evidence of demand and refusal, there is no objection to proof of a conversion by other evidence, the evidence being merely cumulative.⁸⁹ Defendant on the other hand is entitled to introduce any evidence having a tendency to show that the acts complained of do not constitute a conversion.⁹⁰ Evidence to establish a conversion is immaterial and inadmissible where the question of conversion has been settled in another case and where the only question in the instant case is the amount of damages recoverable.⁹¹

It is proper to put in evidence any act, declaration, or admission of the plaintiff which tends to contradict a material averment of his pleading or disclose his consent to the act of conversion; or of the defendant which shows or admits his liability, or disproves his defense.

It is proper to put in evidence any act, declaration, or admission of plaintiff which tends to contradict a material averment of his pleading or disclose his consent to the act of conversion;⁹³ or of defendant which admits his liability, or disproves his defense.⁹⁴ On the other hand it has been held that defendant may introduce the declarations made by him at the time of the demand showing a reasonable excuse for a refusal thereof if the court were first apprised that such declarations tended to establish the fact that such excuse was made.⁹⁵ Plaintiff, by examining a witness to prove a demand and refusal, does not make the declarations of defendant, in reply to the demand, evidence in defendant's favor.⁹⁶ Plaintiff may present evidence as to his transactions with, and statements made to him by, one who the evidence tends to show was repre-

§ 128. — Motive and Good Faith of Defendant

While evidence of good faith on the defendant's part is ordinarily inadmissible, in particular instances such evidence is admissible.

Since it is not essential to conversion that the motive or intent with which the act was committed should be wrongful, or willful, or corrupt, as discussed supra § 7, evidence of good faith on defendant's part is ordinarily inadmissible,³ except, as discussed infra § 130, where it is sought to recover exemplary or punitive damages, in which case defendant is entitled to show that he did the acts complained of in good faith in order to prevent an allowance of exemplary or punitive damages.

§ 129. — Indictment and Conviction

Evidence of a prior indictment and conviction of the thief or of the purchaser is admissible in trover against a purchaser of stolen goods.

Evidence of a prior indictment and conviction of the thief is admissible in trover against a purchaser of stolen goods to account for the absence of the witness and as strengthening the proof of conversion;⁴ but in trover against one indicted for larceny of property, evidence of his acquittal is inadmissible, where the only question in controversy at the trial of the indictment is whether the property, a note, had been paid by the maker at the time of its alleged conversion.⁵ In an action for the conversion of stolen property, knowing that it was stolen, it has been held that evidence that defendant had pleaded guilty to indictments which charged him with receiving, concealing, and storing the stolen property, and with conspiracy to violate statutes relating thereto, is competent not for the purpose of attacking defendant's character, but for the purpose of showing his motive, intent, and design.⁶

§ 130. — Nature and Extent of Injury

- a. In general
- b. Value of property converted
- c. Exemplary, punitive, or special damages
- d. Matters negating, or in reduction or mitigation of, damages

a. In General

The plaintiff is entitled to the admission in evidence of any facts and circumstances which pertain to the extent of his loss, or the measure of damages.

Plaintiff is entitled to the admission in evidence of any facts and circumstances which pertain to the extent of his loss, or the measure of damages.⁷ Evidence of expenses incurred by plaintiff on subsequent trials after the first trial of an action for trover is not admissible where the necessity of subsequent trials was due to no fault of defendant.⁸

b. Value of Property Converted

- (1) In general
- (2) Price obtained on sale of property
- (3) Price paid or cost of production
- (4) Inventory or appraisal
- (5) Property without market value

(1) In General

circumstances which will fairly inform the jury of the character and condition of the property.

In establishing the value of property, the same rules govern as in other actions in which the question of value is involved.⁹ After identification of the property in controversy,¹⁰ and proof of conversion thereof by defendant,¹¹ either party may offer in evidence any facts or circumstances which will fairly inform the jury of the character and condition of the property, and thereby enable them by their experience and the aid of expert testimony, if any be offered, to determine the value¹² of the property as of the particular time of the wrongful conversion thereof, as well as at the particular place of its conversion.¹³ Evidence which is incompetent and immaterial,¹⁴ or which has no probative force on the value of the property converted,¹⁵ or which would be too uncertain and speculative to afford more than a conjecture as to the value,¹⁶ or which is merely hearsay,¹⁷ or which would not be a proper test of the value of the property,¹⁸ or which would furnish an erroneous standard of computation,¹⁹ should be excluded.

Assessment of Property. Where the market value of the property alleged to have been wrongfully converted is in issue, the assessed value of the property may be shown as a circumstance in determining the market value although the assessed value is not conclusive of the market value.²⁰ Evidence that plaintiff did not assess the property for the purpose of taxation is admissible to aid in determining whether the property had a value for the purpose for which it was purchased or had become mere junk as defendant contends.²¹

(2) Price Obtained on Sale of Property

In an action for the conversion of property evidence of what it, or similar property, sold for at a subsequent time in a bona fide transaction is admissible; and while ordinarily unaccepted offers of sale and purchase are not admissible, in particular circumstances such evidence has been admitted.

In an action for the conversion of property evidence of what it, or similar property, sold for at a subsequent time in a bona fide transaction is admissible.²² The price of goods obtained at a sale by auction by an officer of the law is admissible as evidence of their value in plaintiff's behalf,²³ at least in the absence of any showing that the sale brought unusual prices,²⁴ since a forced sale will not be presumed to be for more than the goods are really worth;²⁵ and while the contrary has also been held,²⁶ the price of goods obtained at a forced sale by auction by an officer of the law is competent evidence in defendant's behalf of the value of the goods.²⁷ It has also been held that the price of property sold at auction in accordance with a clause in a chattel mortgage of the property authorizing such sale is evidence for plaintiff of the value of the property, although not conclusive.²⁸ While there is some authority to the contrary,²⁹ the prevailing doctrine is that evidence of the price obtained at a private sale of the property is admissible,³⁰ either for plaintiff³¹ or defendant³² on the question of the value of the goods.

Generally, unaccepted offers of sale and purchase are not admissible,³³ but in particular circumstances such evidence has been admitted.³⁴ Where the ground of the action is conversion of unfinished stock in process of manufacture, defendant will not be permitted to show the proceeds realized from a sale of the chattels converted after they had been manufactured, since such evidence would throw no light on its value at the time of the conversion.³⁵

(3) Price Paid or Cost of Production

In determining the value of the property at the time of the conversion, evidence is admissible of the cost of the property, or the average cost of its production, as circumstances in aid of arriving at the value at the time in question.

In determining the value of the property at the time of the conversion, competent evidence is admissible of the cost of the property,³⁶ or the average cost of its production,³⁷ as circumstances in aid of arriving at the value at the time in question. However, it has been held that such evidence is incompetent in the absence of any showing as to the date of the purchase,³⁸ or the condition of the property when converted.³⁹ When a large number of articles are sold in the aggregate for a given sum, the opinion of witnesses as to the value of a part of the articles will not be received for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the other part.⁴⁰

(4) Inventory or Appraisal

There is authority to the effect that an inventory or appraisal of the property by the defendant is admissible for the purpose of showing the value of the property.

According to some decisions, an inventory or appraisal of the property by defendant is admissible for the purpose of showing the value of the property,⁴¹ at least if the property is of such a nature that the opinion of an expert witness is not necessary;⁴² but there is also authority to the contrary.⁴³

(5) Property without Market Value

Where the property converted is without market value, the plaintiff may introduce evidence to show its actual or intrinsic value.

Where the property converted is without market value, plaintiff may introduce evidence to show its actual or intrinsic value.⁴⁴ Where there is no reasonably available market for the sale of a stock of goods in bulk or in convenient lots, the value of such stock when sold at retail may be admitted in evidence in a conversion action when accompanied by other evidence showing the value of factors included in the retail price in such a manner as to permit the jury, under proper instructions, to eliminate therefrom that portion of the retail price which

For the purpose of recovering exemplary or punitive damages, the plaintiff is entitled to introduce evidence which tends to show that the act complained of was characterized by malice, oppression, or a wanton or reckless disregard of his rights; and the defendant is entitled to introduce evidence to prove the contrary.

For the purpose of recovering exemplary or punitive damages, plaintiff is entitled to introduce any evidence which tends to show that the act complained of was characterized by malice, oppression, or a wanton or reckless disregard of his rights;⁴⁶ and defendant is entitled to introduce evidence to prove the contrary.⁴⁷ Accordingly, for this purpose the facts and circumstances immediately connected with the transaction tending to exhibit or explain the motive and intention of defendant, or tending to show that he did the acts complained of in good faith, are admissible in evidence.⁴⁸ In a proper case, evidence tending to show the financial worth of defendant is admissible in support of plaintiff's claim for punitive damages.⁴⁹

Special damages. Evidence of loss of profits as an element of damages from the conversion of a manufacturing plant resulting in prevention of performance of a contract is admissible on the issue of special damages.⁵⁰ In trover for the conversion of machinery, a letter written by plaintiff to defendant demanding possession of the machinery and giving notice of possible damages following his refusal to deliver is admissible.⁵¹ Where defendant claims damages by reason of plaintiff's depriving him of the use of a motortruck, testimony of defendant's witness indicating that his measure of damage is based on the use of the truck for a particular business is inadmissible.⁵²

d. Matters Negating, or in Reduction or Mitigation of, Damages

The defendant is entitled to introduce any competent evidence which would legitimately negative, mitigate, or reduce the damages alleged.

Defendant is entitled to introduce any competent evidence which would legitimately negative, mitigate, or reduce the damages alleged.⁵³ Thus, in an action for the conversion of a note, defendant may show payment in whole or in part;⁵⁴ the inability of the maker to pay wholly or partially,⁵⁵

In action for conversion of personal property, admission of evidence of resale retail value of goods was error, in absence of evidence showing value of factors included in retail value which would permit jury to eliminate therefrom that portion which did not represent value of stock of goods in bulk or in conveniently saleable lots.—Mevorah v. Evidence held admissible

In action for conversion of stoker where the stoker had no value as such at time of alleged conversion, trial court erred in excluding evidence as to junk value of cast iron at date of alleged conversion.—E. H. Bardes Range & Foundry Co. v. Weaver, Ohio App., 44 N.E.2d 130.

Evidence held inadmissible

In action for value of furniture allegedly converted by defendant, trial court properly excluded letter sought to be introduced in mitigation of damages by defendant in which a tender of the furniture was made, where letter was written after action was filed, prior to that time defendant had unqualifiedly refused to surrender furniture on demand, and willfully claimed it as his own in defiance of plaintiff's claims, and he had taken part of the furniture to another state where it still remained.—Pantz v. Nelson, 135 S.W.2d 897, 234 Mo App. 1043.

Equitable rule

Since the reason for the rule that a converter may show a tender of the converted property to the owner in mitigation of damages is an equitable one, rule was not applicable where owner was compelled to, and did, buy other property because of alleged converter's unlawful refusal to deliver the property to her.—Pantz v. Nelson, supra.

§ 131. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

As in civil actions generally, in an action in trover, any material fact or issue must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.

As in civil actions generally, any material fact or issue must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence,⁶³ even when the act of conversion alleged constitutes a crime.⁶⁴ Positive or direct testimony of the facts essential to a recovery is not indispensable; these facts may be proved inferentially by direct or circumstantial evidence.⁶⁵ Notwithstanding, under the codes, no particular form of complaint may be necessary, substantial differences which control and determine the rights of the parties are still in force,⁶⁶ and a judgment in trover must be supported by the same proof that was necessary under the common law.⁶⁷ It has been said that surmise or conjecture cannot be substituted for proof in an action of trover.⁶⁸

Prima facie case. A prima facie case for recovery is made out where plaintiff shows title to title will suffice as proof of possession until the presumption created thereby is overcome by other evidence,⁷³ since one having title is constructively in possession in the absence of testimony showing the contrary;⁷⁴ and actual possession is sufficient evidence of title to maintain an action for conversion unless the presumption of title arising from possession is rebutted by evidence adduced by defendant.⁷⁵ It has been held that possession of land, either under a title or a claim of title, is sufficient proof of ownership in an action for the conversion of crops or timber asported therefrom,⁷⁶ and that one who has never been in possession may establish prima facie title by showing a sale to him by one in actual possession claiming title.⁷⁷ Plaintiff must prove his ownership or right of possession by a preponderance of the evidence,⁷⁸ and if the evidence is evenly balanced on the right of possession, he cannot recover.⁷⁹

§ 134. — Conversion

In actions for conversion, the conversion must be established by a preponderance of the evidence; any evidence of an act of ownership or control wrongfully exercised over the plaintiff's property will suffice as proof of a conversion, but evidence is insufficient to prove conversion where it fails to afford a reasonable inference that the defendant is guilty.

Trial court's disbelief of testimony

Introduced in action tried by court for conversion of money which defendant had withdrawn from a bank account standing in name of plaintiff's decedent as trustee, upon order executed by decedent in favor of defendant two days before death of decedent, to effect that defendant had delivered the money to decedent before decedent's death, would not warrant a finding that money was not delivered to decedent by defendant—Ancil v. the acts claimed to constitute a conversion occurred before the commencement of the suit, and if the evidence shows that these acts occurred after the commencement of the suit,⁹⁰ or fails to show whether the acts were committed before or after the commencement of the action,⁹¹ the evidence cannot avail as evidence of a conversion. So, evidence which does not show that the property was disposed of by defendant at a time when plaintiff had an interest in it is insufficient to show a conversion.⁹²

Connection of defendant with act of conversion. The connection of defendant with a conversion will be sufficiently shown by proof of any facts or circumstances which will justify an inference that he assisted in wrongfully taking the goods, shared in the proceeds thereof with guilty knowledge, or participated in some act which in law amounted to a conversion.⁹³

§ 135. — Demand and Refusal

In general, a refusal to surrender property on demand is evidence of conversion,⁹⁴ and proof of demand and refusal makes a prima facie case for the plaintiff.

In general, a refusal to surrender property on demand is evidence of conversion,⁹⁴ and proof of demand and refusal makes a prima facie case for plaintiff.⁹⁵ Nevertheless, a demand made after the property was out of defendant's possession and, in consequence, when he could not give it up is not evidence of a conversion.⁹⁶ Evidence of conversion arising from demand and refusal is rebutted by proof that compliance with the demand was impossible.⁹⁷

§ 136. — Value of Property Converted and Damages

In an action for conversion, a person seeking to recover the value of articles converted must produce dependable evidence as to the value of such articles; and direct testimony as to value is not indispensable, if there is proof of the character, quality, and quantity of the injury from which the jury may properly estimate the loss or damage.

Description of property as basis of determining value. A general description of the property by witnesses, such as will enable the jury to estimate its value, will suffice as proof of value,³ and authorize a recovery of the actual damages sustained.⁴

Price obtained on sale of goods. Since, as discussed supra § 130, according to the weight of authority, either plaintiff or defendant may introduce evidence showing the price for which the property was sold, either at a public or private sale, it has been said that such evidence is slight or cogent according to the circumstances,⁵ and that it does not fix the price but is only evidence bearing on the value.⁶ The price at which willing and uncompelled buyers and sellers meet is the best evidence of market value;⁷ and it has been held that proof of the price obtained at a private sale made in a bona fide manner and not forced or made for the purpose of fixing a price is sufficient for a jury to base a verdict on, in the absence of other evidence on the subject.⁸

Value of written instruments. As discussed supra § 121, in trover for the conversion of choses in action, such as promissory notes, bills of exchange, checks, drafts, bonds, corporate stock, or other evidences of indebtedness, it will be presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the value of the instrument is its face value, and, as discussed supra § 130, such presumption may be rebutted by evidence that the instrument is worth less than its face value, or is of no value; but in the absence of such rebutting evidence the presumption becomes conclusive.⁹

Special damages. If plaintiff seeks to recover special damages, consisting of legal or other expenses, he must show the jury what the expenses were, and if he merely states a lump sum, a verdict for such sum will not be allowed to stand but will be reduced to the value of the goods.¹⁰

E. TRIAL AND JUDGMENT

§ 137. In General

§ 138. Dismissal or Nonsuit before Trial

§ 139. Tender of Property

In a proper case, the defendant may in an action of conversion bring the chattel into court and make a tender thereof in reduction of damages.

In some jurisdictions, at least as to bills, notes, bonds and other contracts for payment of money, or articles of a fixed and unchangeable value, defendant may in an action of conversion bring such notes etc., into court and make a tender thereof in reduction of damages,¹⁶ having first obtained leave to do so by a motion addressed to the discretion of the judge, whose decision may be final in some jurisdictions,¹⁷ but not in others.¹⁸ While recognizing that the right may exist in a proper case, in at least one jurisdiction the court has held otherwise as to chattels which may deteriorate while in the possession of defendant.¹⁹

§ 140. Stay of Proceedings

A court may stay proceedings in trover where complete justice can be done by delivery of the chattel into court and on payment of costs by the defendant.

A trial court may stay proceedings in an action of trover where complete justice can be done plaintiff by delivery of the chattel alleged to have been converted into court and on payment of costs by defendant.²⁰ Defendant should make his application to the court both as to costs and the delivery of the chattel at some convenient stage of the cause.²¹

§ 141. Questions of Law and Fact

In actions for trover and conversion questions of law are for the court and questions of fact are for the jury.

As in other civil actions, questions of law are for the determination of the court;²² and, on the other hand, questions of fact are for the jury,²³ or for the court sitting as a jury, where the case is tried to the court.²⁴

§ 142. — Title or Right to Possession

Generally, the question whether a party has title or right to possession of chattel claimed to be converted is one of fact for the jury or court sitting as a jury.

Ordinarily, the question whether plaintiff had title or right to the chattels which he claims have been converted is one of fact for the determination of the jury,²⁵ or for the court sitting as a jury,²⁶ as where the evidence relating to the question is conflicting;²⁷

Title dependent on determination of prior dispute

In action for reasonable value of property alleged to have been converted, where question as to where legal title to chattels rested depended largely on a determination of effect of transactions with respect to modification of licensing agreement under which plaintiff's predecessor was licensee, and there was a dispute between parties as to what such transaction consisted of in fact, a prior determination of such dispute was necessary before legal questions resting thereon could be determined.—*American Castype Corp. v. or ambiguous,²⁸ or where reasonable minds might draw different conclusions from the evidence,²⁹ or where the question of ownership depends solely on the unsupported testimony of plaintiff.³⁰ It is improper to submit such questions to the jury where there is no evidence of plaintiff's title or right to possession,³¹ or where such title or right is not denied but it is urged as a defense that the chattels were worthless;³² and it has been held that the court may properly take from the jury the question of ownership of the property, where the testimony of plaintiff and his witnesses is uncontradicted and shows indisputably that he owned the property.³³ In determining whether plaintiff in a trover action is entitled to possession of the property at the time of the alleged conversion the jury should consider all the surrounding circumstances.³⁴

§ 143. — Conversion

Aside from facts which are found or conceded making the issue of conversion a question of law, whether facts in evidence establish conversion is generally a question for the jury.

What constitutes an unlawful conversion is a question of law where the facts are found or conceded,³⁵ and, in accordance with the general rule that questions of law should not be submitted to the jury, as discussed in Trial § 295, it is error for the court to submit to the jury the question whether defendant "unlawfully converted" plaintiff's chattels to his own use.³⁶ Nevertheless, the question whether the facts adduced in evidence establish an unlawful conversion is usually a question to be determined by the jury,³⁷ under proper instructions from the court;³⁸ and it has been so held where the evidence is conflicting,³⁹ where the evidence makes out

Evidence undisputed

In action for conversion of negotiable bonds, where there appeared in the testimony no circumstances to suggest knowledge of defendant that person disposing of bonds was not a holder thereof in due course, nor any bad faith on defendant's part, and the evidence was undisputed and presented by plaintiff itself, it was proper for the trial court to declare as a matter of law that the facts conclusively established the innocence of defendant in the transaction.—First Nat. Slight conflict as to minor details

a prima facie case for plaintiff,⁴⁰ where there is some evidence to establish a conversion,⁴¹ although slight,⁴² where defendant's refusal to deliver plaintiff's chattels on demand was not unconditional, but qualified,⁴³ or where the evidence, if true, would authorize a recovery.⁴⁴

It has been held that whether a conversion by defendant brought in by amendment took place before the commencement of the suit is a question for the jury.⁴⁵ Where, however, the testimony is undisputed, that defendant claimed to own the property absolutely, it is unnecessary to submit the issue of conversion to the jury if they find that he held the goods as security only.⁴⁶ A party by not excepting to a charge and not challenging the verdict on certain grounds may practically concede that the fact whether he aided in the conversion is a question for the jury to decide.⁴⁷

Trial by court. Where the case is tried by the court without a jury, the question of conversion is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the court sitting as a jury.⁴⁸

§ 144. — Identification and Value of Property

Ordinarily, the questions whether property converted is sufficiently identified, and the value thereof, are for the jury.

Whether the property alleged to have been converted is sufficiently identified is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury.⁴⁹ The value of a chattel alleged to be converted is a question of fact for the jury at least where there is some evidence submitted as to its value,⁵⁰ and where there is a conflict in the evidence as to value.⁵¹ The fact that plaintiff's testimony was the only evidence of the value of the property at the place of conversion does not authorize the withdrawal of such issue from the jury since the jury are not bound to accept his testimony as true, especially where it was shown that he was poorly qualified to testify as to its value.⁵²

§ 145. — Motive and Good Faith

Whether a party accused of conversion acted in good faith, or had a reasonable or proper purpose in taking or detaining the property, is generally a question for the jury.

Whether the taking or detention of plaintiff's chattels by defendant, relied on as constituting a conversion, was in good faith or if for any reasonable or proper purpose and, therefore, justifiable, is ordinarily a question for the jury.⁵³ However, if what evidence there is on the issue of malice rebuts any inference thereof, it is error to submit the issue to the jury.⁵⁴

§ 146. — Demand

Whether a demand has been made for the property is generally a question for the jury.

Whether a demand has been made on defendant for the property is ordinarily a question of fact to

§ 147. — Waiver of Conversion

Whether or not a conversion of property has been waived is a question for the jury.

Whether or not a conversion of chattels has been waived is a question of intent,⁶⁰ and a question of fact for the determination of the jury,⁶¹ under proper instructions from the court.⁶²

§ 148. — Damages

- a. In general
- b. Exemplary damages

a. In General

The rule of damages is a question of law for the court, but the amount of damages is a question of fact for the jury.

In trover the rule of damages is a question of law for the court,⁶³ but the amount of damages is a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence under proper instructions from the court,⁶⁴ its discretion in fixing the matter of damages, however, being subject to the limitation that the verdict must not be inadequate or excessive;⁶⁵ and it has been held that the rendition of a final judgment even by default in an action of trover without submitting the case to a jury to assess damages is unauthorized and erroneous.⁶⁶

It is proper to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages where the facts authorize a finding of malicious or reckless and wanton conversion.

If the facts authorize a finding of unlawful and malicious acts,⁶⁷ or a finding of reckless and wanton conversion,⁶⁸ it is proper to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages, and it is for them to determine the amount of such damages from all the facts and circumstances in the case.⁶⁹ On the other hand, it is improper to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages where the facts show that the property was taken under a claim of right although over the protest of the one in possession.⁷⁰

As in other civil actions, if there is an entire absence of evidence to sustain the cause of action alleged,⁷¹ as where the evidence does not make out a prima facie case,⁷² or the absence of some fact indispensable to a recovery,⁷³ the court may and should withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury; and such is the case where reasonable minds would not be warranted in drawing different conclusions from the evidence.⁷⁴ So, where the evidence is all one way and is not contradicted, and but one legitimate inference may be drawn from it, and a case is thereby made for plaintiff or a defense made for defendant, the case should be taken from the jury.⁷⁵ On the other hand, the case should not be withdrawn from the jury on defendant's motion unless the evidence requires, as a matter of law, a verdict against plaintiff,⁷⁶ or if there is any evidence tending to support the cause of action alleged.⁷⁷

b. Dismissal or Nonsuit

A motion to dismiss should be granted, or a nonsuit may properly be directed, where there is an entire failure to prove some fact indispensable to the plaintiff's cause of action.

A motion by defendant to dismiss the petition or complaint should be granted where there is an entire failure to prove some fact indispensable to the cause of action,⁷⁸ such, for instance, as ownership of the property alleged to have been converted by plaintiff,⁷⁹ or that the property had been converted.⁸⁰ Where the action is against several defendants the complaint will be dismissed as to such defendants whose connection with the transaction involved has not been made clear.⁸¹ It is error to dismiss where there is some evidence tending to establish a cause of action,⁸² and it is error to dismiss as to some of plaintiffs when defendant asks for affirmative relief.⁸³ It is not improper to overrule a motion to dismiss where the proof shows that the tort of conversion was committed, as against defendant's contention that it shows a breach of contract.⁸⁴

Nonsuit. As in civil actions generally, a nonsuit is properly directed where plaintiff fails to establish some fact indispensable to a recovery.⁸⁵ On the other hand, a judgment for nonsuit should not be awarded where the evidence is sufficient to support the allegations of the petition,⁸⁶ or to make out a prima facie case entitling plaintiff to some amount of damages,⁸⁷ or where, considering the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, it tends to show a conversion,⁸⁸ or where there is sufficient evidence of a conversion to raise a question for the jury,⁸⁹ or where the evidence, although circumstantial only, tends strongly to show that defendant had got possession of the property by undue means.⁹⁰ Prospective difficulty in apportioning between plaintiffs in an action of conversion any possible recovery because of complicated business arrangements is of no concern to defendants and not a proper ground for motion of nonsuit for misjoinder of parties plaintiff.⁹¹ A nonsuit should not be granted for want of proof of ownership where the evidence adduced makes out a prima facie case of ownership,⁹² or where the evidence as to ownership is conflicting.⁹³ A motion for nonsuit will not be granted because plaintiff fails to establish facts

Where plaintiff sued in conversion for recovery of goods sold on consignment under agreement providing for stipulated division of profits of sale, and delivery, retention, and nonpayment was shown, complaint for conversion should not have been dismissed, until such time as defendant should adduce evidence disproving a conversion and showing that only an accounting was necessary—S. not essential to his cause of action.⁹⁴ The fact that plaintiff, suing as owner for conversion of property, was in reality an assignee of the owner's cause of action does not require granting a motion for nonsuit on the ground that defendant might have pleaded offset against the owner had plaintiff sued as assignee, at least where defendant has not asked leave to plead such offset or to amend his pleadings.⁹⁵

c. Demurrer to Evidence

Where there is some evidence for the jury on the question of conversion, it is not proper to sustain a demurrer to the evidence.

If there is evidence from which the jury might find a verdict for plaintiff, it is erroneous to sustain a demurrer to the evidence.⁹⁶ So, a demurrer to the evidence should not be sustained for entire failure to prove the cause of action alleged, by reason of the fact that the petition alleged ownership and possession of the property converted and the evidence established possession only, since right to immediate possession supports the action, and the allegation of ownership may be treated as surplusage.⁹⁷ Peremptory instructions in the nature of special demurrers to evidence as to conversion are properly refused, where there is evidence tending to establish a conversion.⁹⁸ On the other hand, where there is an entire lack of evidence to show a conversion, a demurrer to the evidence is properly sustained.⁹⁹

d. Directing Verdict.

The trial judge may in a proper case require the jury to return a particular verdict.

In a proper case it is permissible for a trial judge to withdraw it from a jury and require them to return a particular verdict.¹ A verdict should not be directed for either party, however, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence,² as where there is a conflict in the evidence with respect to title to the property in suit,³ or on the question of conversion.⁴

For plaintiff. A verdict may be directed for plaintiff where a case is made for him by evidence⁵ which is all one way and is uncontradicted, and where but one legitimate inference may be drawn from it,⁶ where plaintiff's evidence plainly establishes his right to recover and defendant does not offer sufficient evidence to justify a verdict in his favor,⁷ or where reasonable minds would not be warranted in drawing different conclusions from the evidence.⁸ It is error to direct a verdict for nominal damages only where there is evidence permitting a reasonably certain estimate of the quantity of property converted, although the precise quantity was not shown.⁹ On the other hand, a verdict should not be directed for plaintiff where different inferences might be drawn from the evidence,¹⁰ where he has failed to establish some essential element of his case,¹¹ such as possession or right of possession in himself,¹² and conversion of the property in suit by defendant,¹³ or where the question of ownership depends solely on the unsupported testimony of plaintiff.¹⁴

For defendant. A verdict may and should be directed for defendant where there is a total failure of proof authorizing a recovery,¹⁵ where the evidence is all one way and is uncontradicted and but

In action for conversion of truck and trailer, overruling of plaintiff's motion, for instructed verdict for possession of truck and trailer, was not error in absence of evidence showing that defendant ever took or had possession of truck and trailer—Edmondson v. one legitimate inference may be drawn from it and a defense is thereby made out for defendant,¹⁶ where the uncontradicted evidence shows defendant had a better title,¹⁷ where there was an entire lack of evidence to show there was a conversion,¹⁸ where plaintiff did not make out a prima facie case of ownership,¹⁹ where plaintiff did not have possession or right to immediate possession of the property at the time of the conversion,²⁰ where from the testimony adduced all men of reasonable minds would come to the conclusion that defendant had not converted the property,²¹ or where the material evidence on which plaintiff based his case was excluded and no exception was taken by him.²² A verdict is properly directed for defendant where it is shown that, at the time plaintiff demanded a return of the chattels, he was unable to comply with the demand, because the chattels were in the custody of a constable by virtue of an attachment, although defendant controlled the building where the chattels were locked up.²³

On the other hand, a verdict should not be directed for defendant unless the evidence is such as to require, as a matter of law, a verdict against plaintiff.²⁴ A verdict should not be directed for defendant where the evidence makes a prima facie case for plaintiff;²⁵ where there is substantial²⁶ or undisputed²⁷ evidence to show ownership in plaintiff; where there is some evidence of plaintiff's title and defendant's lack of title;²⁸ where there is evidence to go to the jury on facts necessary to be established by plaintiff;²⁹ where defendant concedes that his liability is an issue for the jury;³⁰ where there is some evidence tending to show a conversion;³¹ or where, although no direct evidence of value is offered, enough appears from the evidence to show that the property was of some value.³² Likewise, a verdict should not be directed for defendant merely because the evidence does not show the precise quantity of chattels converted, where there is evidence permitting a reasonably certain estimate of quantity.³³ It has been held that the court may not direct a verdict for defendant on the ground of absence of proof of value, since plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages on proof of conversion without proof of value.³⁴

§ 150. Instructions

Instructions given in an action for conversion, as in other civil actions, must state correctly the law applicable to the case. The defendant is entitled to an instruction on the burden of proof. Requested instructions which are correct as to the law should be given.

Conversion before acquiring any interest

The right of one owner of chattels to bring trover against a coowner is not raised by motion to direct a verdict for defendant where there is evidence of conversion by defendant before he acquired any interest in the property.—Stamps v. Thomas, 62 So. 314, 7 Ala.App. 622.

plete,³⁶ argumentative,³⁷ conflicting,³⁸ involved,³⁹ calculated to confuse the jury,⁴⁰ too indefinite to furnish a proper guide to the jury,⁴¹ or which are in any respect misleading.⁴² So instructions should be limited to the theory on which the case was tried⁴³ and must be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings and evidence;⁴⁴ and should not be given by the court on its motion, or on the request of the parties, where they are not applicable to the issues made by the pleadings,⁴⁵ or to the facts in evidence,⁴⁶ although if applicable to the issues raised by the pleadings and evidence, it is not only proper to give them,⁴⁷ but erroneous to refuse them.⁴⁸

Instructions should not ignore elements essential to a recovery,⁴⁹ since defendant is entitled to instructions stating matters necessary to make out a cause of action,⁵⁰ nor should they ignore or exclude from the consideration of the jury issues having support in the evidence,⁵¹ or assume as proved a fact which the evidence only tends to prove,⁵² or with respect to which the evidence is contradictory,⁵³ or which the evidence tends to show does not exist.⁵⁴ Instructions should not express an opinion on the weight and sufficiency of the evidence,⁵⁵ or state the weight which should be attached to a particular portion of the evidence,⁵⁶ or single out the testimony of a particular witness, where there are others testifying to the same matters, and require the jury to find in accordance with his testimony if they believe it.⁵⁷

Burden of proof and degree of proof. Defendant is entitled to instructions on the burden of proof;⁵⁸ but an instruction is erroneous which imposes on plaintiff the burden of proof on all the issues where the burden of proof is on defendant as to some of the issues.⁵⁹ A preponderance of evidence is all that is required to sustain an issue, and an instruction which casts on a party the burden of proving his contention beyond a doubt is erroneous.⁶⁰

Requests for instructions. Requested instructions which state principles of law which are correct and applicable to the issues should be given,⁶¹ and it is error to refuse a requested instruction in such a case,⁶² unless already covered by other instructions.⁶³ On the other hand, an instruction is properly refused where it does not state the law correctly,⁶⁴ and where numerous and complicated instructions are asked by counsel, calculated, in the opinion of the court, to embarrass the jury, it has the right to refuse all, and to give such prepared by itself as may illustrate the principles of the law involved in the controversy, and asked for by the parties.⁶⁵ acts of which evidence has been admitted which are sufficient, if proved, to constitute conversion.

The court should instruct the jury as to whether acts of which evidence has been admitted are sufficient, if proved, to constitute conversion;⁶⁶ and it is error to give instructions as to such matters where the law is incorrectly stated,⁶⁷ unless they are corrected by other instructions.⁶⁸ On the other hand, requested instructions on the issue of conversion are properly refused where they state the law incorrectly.⁶⁹ It is also error to give an instruction to find for defendant if the evidence shows the date of conversion to be different from that alleged, since the allegation as to time is immaterial in an action of trover.⁷⁰ Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether the taking of the property by defendant and his conversion thereof to his own use was with the consent of plaintiff, it is error to charge that, if the jury find that defendant took and carried away the property and converted it to his own use, they must find for plaintiff, without regard to any agreement or understanding had between the parties concerning the taking of the property by defendant.⁷¹

§ 152. — Title and Right to Property

Where title or right to property is in issue, an instruction that the plaintiff must prove title or right to the property should be given, even though the plaintiff's evidence as to title is uncontradicted.

Where title or right to property alleged to have been wrongfully converted by defendant is in issue, a general instruction that plaintiff must prove it will suffice;⁷² and such an instruction should be given even though plaintiff's testimony as to his title is uncontradicted.⁷³ Either plaintiff⁷⁴ or defendant,⁷⁵ who has adduced evidence to show that the title to the property is in him, is entitled to an appropriate instruction on the evidence in his favor. Where plaintiff and defendant claim through different chains of title, there is no error in giving an instruction that plaintiff cannot recover if defendant's vendor owned the property when he transferred it to defendant.⁷⁶ An instruction as to title of the property alleged to have been converted, not based on evidence,⁷⁷ or unsound in law,⁷⁸ is improper.

§ 153. — Identity of Property

If the identity of the property alleged to have been converted is put in issue, the court should instruct that the plaintiff cannot recover unless he establishes such identity.

If the identity of the property alleged to have been converted is an issue, the court should instruct that plaintiff cannot recover unless he establishes such identity,⁷⁹ and an instruction which assumes the identity of the property converted with that of plaintiff is erroneous.⁸⁰

Instruction as to plaintiff's proof

In action for conversion of chattels, instruction that before plaintiff could recover she must prove that defendant at time of alleged conversion had knowledge that property belonged to plaintiff was error—Wilson v. Holmes, 50 P.2d 1081, 174 Okl. 527.

Tender of property

In action for conversion of personalty, the issue was whether plaintiff's personalty had been wrongfully converted by defendant, and instruction, that defendant's failure to tender property to plaintiff would amount to conversion, failed to state the issue correctly and placed too heavy a burden on plaintiff—Shell Oil Co. v. § 154. — Demand and Refusal Instructions as to demand and refusal need not be given except where necessary to establish a conversion in the particular case.

Where, under the pleadings and evidence of the particular case, proof of demand and refusal are essential to conversion,⁸¹ or may constitute one mode of conversion,⁸² the jury should be so instructed; but otherwise no instruction as to demand and refusal need be given,⁸³ and requested instructions on these points are properly refused.⁸⁴ Where there is a qualified refusal to a demand, the court should give appropriate instructions as to the existence and reasonableness of the qualified refusal.⁸⁵ A requested instruction need not be given where covered by other instructions.⁸⁶

§ 155. — Intent; Good Faith; Malice

Since intent is merged in the act in an action for conversion, it is not error to omit from a requested instruction words predicating recovery on the intention of the defendant.

In an action for conversion, the court may properly omit from a requested instruction any words predicating recovery on the intent of defendant, since the intent is merged in the act so that it is not what defendant intended, but what he did that governs.⁸⁷ As discussed supra § 7, the question whether defendant acted in good faith or willfully and corruptly is not as a general rule involved in an action for conversion unless exemplary damages are asked. On the other hand, where the good faith of defendant constitutes a defense, an instruction that if he exercised good faith and reasonable caution under the circumstances they should return a verdict for defendant is proper.⁸⁸ If the act of alleged conversion consisted in the purchase of plaintiff's goods from a third person and there was evidence that defendant was a bona fide purchaser for value, who relied on conduct of plaintiff, leading him to believe that the seller had authority from plaintiff to make the sale, it is the duty of the court to submit these facts to the jury, explaining the doctrine of estoppel that would bind the principal.⁸⁹

In an action where exemplary damages are asked by reason of malice, an instruction that the term "malice" means, not spite or ill will, but the knowing or intentional doing of a wrongful act, is not erroneous in omitting the further phrase "without just cause or excuse," since the intentional doing of a wrongful act is necessarily an act done without just cause or excuse.⁹⁰ An instruction which makes freedom from knowledge of circumstances or facts which ought to put a person on inquiry as to the rights of others a necessary element of good faith is a misstatement of law, and erroneous, since neither such knowledge nor its absence is, as a matter of law, conclusive of defendant's motive.⁹¹

§ 156. — Damages

- a. In general
- b. Exemplary damages

a. In General

In an action for conversion, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the correct measure of damages, including rules as to special and nominal damages.

In accordance with general principles, discussed in Damages §§ 177-188, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the correct measure of damages.⁹² The jury should not be left without

In action for conversion of an automobile, plaintiff's testimony that automobile was worth from five hundred dollars to six hundred dollars at time of conversion was sufficient to support instruction to assess actual damages at fair cash value of automobile when converted.—Detmer v. a guide as to the amount of damages they may award.⁹³ Requested instructions which prescribe erroneous rules for the measure of damages are properly refused;⁹⁴ and a charge which in one portion states the measure of damages correctly is fatally defective where another portion prescribes a different and erroneous rule for fixing the measure of damages.⁹⁵

Where the instruction taken as a whole correctly states the measure of damages and could not have misled the jury, it is not subject to objection, although a portion of it standing alone might perhaps be understood as authorizing some special damages in addition to the amount to which plaintiff was actually entitled.⁹⁶ An instruction authorizing the jury to determine whether there existed a market value for the property is error where the evidence fails to show the absence of such value.⁹⁷ However, where the property has no market value at the time and place it was converted, it is proper to instruct the jury that the permissible recovery is the reasonable worth and value of such property as shown by the evidence.⁹⁸ An instruction dealing with the intrinsic value of the property converted which fails properly to define the term is erroneous,⁹⁹ as, for example, where the court restricts its definition to the value of the property to the owner.¹

Special damages. Where special damages are alleged and proved, the court should properly instruct the jury as to awarding such damages,² and should submit rules prescribed by statute for determining the measure of damages for wrongful conversion and supplement those rules by an instruction that, if the special damages pleaded, or any of them, were proved, such damages might be allowed in addition to those contemplated by the statute.³

Nominal damages. An instruction limiting damages to a nominal amount is proper where the conversion is alleged to have resulted from a wrongful act with respect to property in plaintiff's possession, and there is no evidence establishing a difference in the value of the property before and after the alleged conversion thereto.⁴

Construction. A charge limiting the amount recoverable to the actual value of the property taken, at the time and place of its conversion, is equivalent to a charge that plaintiffs could not recover the amount which might be recoverable by them if the trespass had been willful.⁵

Subject to the limitation that the plaintiff must have suffered actual damages, if there is evidence which, if believed, would authorize the allowance of exemplary damages, the court should instruct the jury as to such damages.

Since actual damages must be shown in order to recover exemplary damages, it is proper for the court to refuse to submit the question of exemplary damages when plaintiff has proved no actual damages.⁶ Subject to this limitation, if there is evidence, which if believed, would authorize the allowance of exemplary damages, the court may so instruct the jury;⁷ but a requested instruction for exemplary damages is properly refused where the evidence does not support it.⁸ The court in instructing the jury as to exemplary damages should require the jury to find the facts alleged as a basis therefor, or to find for defendant thereon.⁹ Instructions

(2) In suit by paving contractor against junk dealers for conversion of used paving equipment, instruction defining intrinsic value as the real worth, in money, if any, of the equipment of the contractor for the purpose for which the equipment was used or was capable of being used in the future by the contractor was erroneous, since intrinsic value of property is the true, inherent, and essential value of the property, not depending on accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere and to everyone.—*Rosenfield v. Instructions held proper

Where allegations and proof showed that defendant had converted personal property and there was evidence that conversion was wanton and in reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights, it was not error for court to submit question of assessment of punitive damages as prayed for by the plaintiff.—*Armstrong v. that the jury may award, in their discretion, punitive damages have been held proper where a party's rights have been consciously, willfully, and recklessly violated,¹⁰ or where the taking was willful, malicious, and unlawful.¹¹ Failure of an instruction to define the terms "wantonly" and "without legal cause or excuse" is not erroneous, where used in the ordinary and popular sense, so that the jury could not have been misled thereby;¹² but it has been held that the court should properly define the legal terms "wanton and reckless disregard of rights" of plaintiff in submitting issue of exemplary damages to the jury.¹³

An instruction, authorizing exemplary damages if defendant seized the property "willfully or maliciously and with intent to vex" plaintiff, has been held to be erroneous because of the use of the word "or" instead of the word "and," since every act intentionally done is done willfully.¹⁴ An instruction that no punitive damages may be awarded if defendant honestly believed he had the right to remove the property under his contract with plaintiff, and there was no willfulness on his part to injure plaintiff in his business, has been held substantially correct.¹⁵

§ 157. — Interest

The propriety of instructions as to interest on the value of the property converted may be controlled by applicable statutory provisions.

Where by statute it is made discretionary with the jury as to whether they shall allow interest on the value of the property converted, it is error for the court to give a peremptory instruction allowing such interest.¹⁶

Damages in specified amount

In action to recover damages for alleged wrongful taking from plaintiff of an automobile which she claimed to have purchased from defendant, jury's verdict finding for plaintiff actual damages in specified amount did not accord with requirements of verdict in claim and delivery action, but conformed to requirements of verdict in action for conversion.—Rhode v. § 158. Verdict and Findings

- a. Verdict
- b. Findings of court

a. Verdict

The verdict of the jury in an action of conversion, as in other civil actions, must be responsive to the issues raised and supported by the evidence adduced.

In actions of trover the verdict must be responsive to the issues,¹⁷ and be so expressed as to show that the jury decided the question submitted to them,¹⁸ and it must be supported by the evidence.¹⁹ After the formal parts, a verdict for plaintiff should contain nothing more than a finding of the issues for plaintiff,²⁰ and the amount which he is entitled to recover.²¹ This latter requirement, however, is indispensable.²²

Surplusage will not vitiate a verdict which is in other respects valid. The surplusage will be rejected and judgment rendered independently of the unnecessary matter.²³

Amendment. The court may amend the verdict so as to express the meaning of the jury where there is no room for doubt as to the party in whose favor the jury intended to decide or as to the amount which they held him entitled to recover.²⁴

Operation and effect. By a verdict in trover, the property converted is no longer in plaintiff but has passed by operation of law to defendant.²⁵

Special verdict. As in other civil actions, special verdicts in actions of trover must find ultimate and not evidentiary facts so that only questions of law are referred to the court.²⁶

In actions against several defendants. A verdict may be found against one or more defendants and in favor of the others²⁷ the verdict and judgment being shaped so as to hold liable those only who are shown by the evidence to have been guilty of conversion.²⁸

Finding by jury. A finding that plaintiff had not satisfied the jury by a fair balance of the evidence that defendant acted in bad faith is not tantamount to a finding that he acted in good faith.²⁹

b. Findings of Court

Where trial is by the court in an action of conversion, the findings of fact must be supported by the evidence, and be responsive to and cover all material issues.

Rules governing findings in a trial to the court in civil actions generally require that the findings of fact in actions of this character must be supported by the evidence,³⁰ and not be inconsistent,³¹ and must be responsive to³² and cover³³ all material issues, but findings which comply with this requirement will be sufficient.³⁴ So also, the findings must be sufficient to sustain the judgment.³⁵ The findings need not include matters immaterial to a decision of the case,³⁶ and a finding of ultimate facts includes all the probative facts, together with the inferences therefrom.³⁷ A motion at the close of plaintiff's evidence³⁸ and at the close of all the evidence³⁹ in a trial by the court on waiver of the evidence to have given on instruction that the court finds the issues for defendant is in effect a demurrer to the evidence and is properly refused where there is evidence tending to support plaintiff's case.

Construction. Where the complaint charged the conversion of money only by defendant, and there was a finding as to the conversion of chattels and no finding as to their value or as to the amount of money converted, a conclusion that defendant had converted "money and property" cannot be treated as applying only to the conversion of money.⁴⁰

Findings of referee. The findings of a referee have been held sufficient even as to facts that are not expressly stated, where they are clearly implied.⁴¹

§ 159. Judgment

In an action of conversion the judgment must conform to, and be supported by, the pleadings, evidence, and verdict. A judgment for a joint conversion against two or more defendants must be joint in form.

The judgment must conform to, and be supported by, the pleadings⁴² and evidence;⁴³ otherwise it

Judgment for defendant authorized

Where no evidence of probative force was offered to show that defendant had converted to his own use plaintiff's household goods and defendant disclaimed in open court any interest in such goods, judgment for defendant on charge of conversion was authorized.—Wilson v. Fuston, Civ.App., 189 S.W.2d 769, reversed on other grounds 192 S.W.2d 444, 144 Tex. 588.

will be erroneous;⁴⁴ and it must conform to, and be supported by, the verdict of the jury or the findings of the court. If it fails to meet this requirement, it will be void.⁴⁵ Since, as discussed supra § 67, an action of trover is an action to recover the value of the property wrongfully converted, and not the specific property itself, the judgment in this form of action should be for damages only, and not for the recovery of the property converted,⁴⁶ and a judgment in the alternative for damages or for a return of the property is erroneous.⁴⁷ It has been held, however, where judgment was obtained for a certain sum for the value of the personalty taken that defendant could discharge the judgment by returning the personalty to plaintiff and that defendant may not complain that the result constitutes a double recovery.⁴⁸

Joint judgments. A judgment rendered on a verdict against two or more defendants for a joint conversion must be joint in form;⁴⁹ but a joint judgment against two or more defendants for conversions committed by them severally is erroneous.⁵⁰ A joint judgment in favor of plaintiffs necessarily imports a finding that the joint ownership of the property alleged to be converted was established on the trial to have existed at the time of the conversion.⁵¹

Interest. The court may properly enter judgment for plaintiff for interest at the legal rate, although it had not submitted to the jury the issue of plaintiff's right to interest.⁵²

- a. In general
- b. As transferring title to property to defendant

a. In General

The general rules applicable to the construction, operation, and effect of judgments apply to judgments in actions of trover.

The general rules governing the construction, operation, and effect of judgments in civil actions, as discussed in Judgments §§ 436-453, apply to judgments in actions of trover.⁵³ Defendant may not complain, where the suit prayed for return of the property or its value, that the judgment is for value only, since the judgment in the absence of a showing to the contrary is equivalent to a finding that the property cannot be returned.⁵⁴ Where the court finds that there has been no conversion, and that the personalty in controversy belongs to plaintiff, that portion of the judgment purporting to deprive plaintiff of his title to the personalty on failure to remove it from the premises of defendant within a stipulated period has been held erroneous.⁵⁵

b. As Transferring Title to Property to Defendant

Where judgment for the plaintiff has been satisfied, the title to the property is, by operation of law, vested in the defendant, but where the judgment is unsatisfied, the majority rule is that title to the property does not vest in the defendant.

The general rule is well settled that, where a judgment for plaintiff has been satisfied, the title to the property, whether legal or equitable,⁵⁶ is, by operation of law, vested in defendant.⁵⁷ independent

Return of purchase money to plaintiff

In action by purchaser against dealers for conversion of automobile after alleged sale to purchaser, wherein jury accepted defense that no sale took place, purchaser was entitled as a matter of law to return of purchase money, which should have been deposited in court before judgment was entered on verdict for dealers, or else judgment should have been entered in purchaser's favor for amount of money retained.—Knapp v. Relief from money judgment

In suit for conversion of corporate stock in a company owning a patent,

where the order of the trial court relieving defendants from a money judgment if they transferred the stock to plaintiffs was conditioned on the fact that at time of transfer title to the patent should be in the company, but when defendants attempted to transfer the shares title had been lost because a good faith incumbrance had been foreclosed, defendants were liable to a money judgment as for failure to accept the privilege of transfer offered them, even though a certain defendant did all in his power as a single stockholder to avoid foreclosure of the incumbrance, and though his appeals to plaintiffs for aid were disregarded.—Bryan & Co. v. Scurlock, 180 N.W. 634, 190 Iowa 534.

of any provision in the judgment to that effect.⁵⁸ and plaintiff is conclusively estopped to assert any further right or title to, or interest in, the property converted.⁵⁹ It has been said that if, to effectuate the transfer, some affirmative act by plaintiff is necessary, the court has power to provide for it in the judgment or otherwise to compel it,⁶⁰ and the title thus acquired relates back to the date of the conversion.⁶¹ Nevertheless, the rule has no application where it is apparent that the value of the property converted does not furnish the rule of damages and that the judgment is for less than its value.⁶²

Imprisonment of defendant under a judgment in trover is not such satisfaction of the judgment as will transfer the title in the converted property to him.⁶³ So, also, the rule is without application where, in an action brought against him, the owner of chattels sets up a counterclaim for damages for plaintiff's alleged conversion of the property and plaintiff denies the conversion, and the parties stipulate for a dismissal of their respective causes of action with prejudice and, pursuant to the stipulation, judgment of dismissal is entered;⁶⁴ and it cannot be invoked by one who was not a party to the action and who did not connect his title with the title acquired by defendant,⁶⁵ or as against a third claimant of the property to whom defendant voluntarily surrendered it after the conversion, and before the judgment.⁶⁶

Unsatisfied judgment. While there is some authority holding that an unsatisfied judgment for plaintiff in an action of trover will pass title to the property converted to defendant,⁶⁷ it is generally held that a judgment for plaintiff in an action of trover, if unsatisfied, does not vest title to the property in suit in defendant.⁶⁸

Forced sale

A judgment for conversion has normally no other consequence than to compel the defendant to buy the converted goods at what is in reality a forced sale.—Martin v. Sikes, 229 P.2d 546, 38 Wash.2d 274.

Title confirmed by implication

An award of damages for conversion impliedly confirms title in the converter.—Southwestern Peanut Growers Ass'n v. Womack, Tex. Civ. App., 179 S.W.2d 371.

Prior action

(1) If plaintiff has received satisfaction in an earlier action for conversion against another, title to article involved passes to defendant in the earlier action.—MacNeil v. Hazleton, 28 N.E.2d 477, 306 Mass. 366.

(2) A prior decree directing complainant's former president to pay to complainant the amount of complainant's funds misappropriated by former president did not pass title to misappropriated funds so as to preclude complainant from recovering inventions, patents, and other assets obtained with misappropriated funds.—Flannery v. Flannery Bolt Co., CCA Pa., 108 F.2d 531, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 615, 309 U.S. 671, 84 L.Ed. 1017.

Proceedings in equity

(1) The doctrine that a judgment in trover for conversion passes title to the res is never applied to proceedings in equity to trace proceeds of res, but is confined to cases of trover.—Flannery v. Flannery Bolt Co., supra.

Legal effect of trover judgment

(1) The legal effect of a money judgment for plaintiff in trover for a specific chattel, when satisfied, is to transfer title, rights, and interest thereto in defendant.—Segal v. Travler Radio Corp., 94 N.E.2d 751, 311 Ill.App. 664.

(2) Where owner of mold used to manufacture plastic radio cabinets had secured a money judgment against a corporation for conversion thereof and judgment was satisfied, he could not later bring an action for an accounting of profits made from sale of cabinets manufactured with mold.—Segal v. Travler Radio Corp., supra.

Proceeds of sale by court order

Where mortgagees caused writ of sequestration to be levied on livestock covered by chattel mortgage and had stock sold under order of court as perishable property, if mortgagees were liable for converting livestock, they were entitled to proceeds derived from sale, less costs incurred.—Parker v. Burleson, Tex. Civ. App., 129 S.W.2d 389.

F. DAMAGES

§ 161. Nominal Damages

If there has been a technical conversion the defendant is liable for at least nominal damages although no actual loss is shown.

Although no actual loss is shown, if there has been a technical conversion the defendant is liable for at least nominal damages.⁶⁹

§ 162. Compensatory Damages in General

As a general rule the plaintiff's damages, in an action of conversion, are measured by the sum necessary to compensate him for all actual losses or injuries sustained as a natural and proximate result of the defendant's wrong.

As a general rule plaintiff's damages, in an action of conversion, are measured by the sum necessary to compensate him for all actual losses or injuries sustained as a natural and proximate result of defendant's wrong;⁷⁰ but there can be no recovery for losses which are too remote and uncertain.⁷¹ Although the technical action of trover may have been abolished, and replaced by a statutory action of trespass on the case for the unlawful conversion of personal property, the rule of damages in such cases remains the same.⁷²

Reference. It is the duty of the court, when an action for conversion has been referred, to see that the measure of damages adopted conforms to the rule applicable in such trials by juries.⁷³

§ 163. Value of Property in General

While exceptions are often recognized, the ordinary measure of damages in an action of trover is the value of the property converted at the time and place of conversion, with interest.

While exceptions are often recognized where the application of this measure does not accord with the principle of just compensation for the loss sustained, the ordinary measure of damages in an action of trover is the value of the property converted at the time and place of the conversion,⁷⁴ with interest, as discussed infra § 171.

Where sale is forbidden

Effect of price ceilings

(1) Measure of damages for conversion of automobile was value of automobile at time and place of conversion without regard to federal regulations fixing ceiling prices on used automobiles.—Anstine v. McWilliams, supra.

(2) Office of Price Administration price ceilings were not promulgated to govern amount of recovery for loss of personal property by wrongful conversion, and hence court properly took plaintiff's testimony as to cost of tubes, rather than ceiling price thereof, in fixing value of tubes as basis for assessment of damages, whether in recognition of fact that such cost closely approximated present market price of tubes or as most equitable and reliable way of fixing amount of damages.—Lym v. Thompson, 184 P.2d 667, 112 Utah 24.

Where no conversion is shown, total value of the property was not correct measure of owner's damages, and refusal to award damages was proper, where other damages were not sought or shown.—Guyer v. Guyer, Tex. Civ. App., 141 S.W.2d 953, error refused.

than the price paid for the property by plaintiff,⁷⁹ a price lower than the market value at which the plaintiff could purchase property of like species, quantity, and quality, under a contract he has with a third person,⁸⁰ the price at which it was sold,⁸¹ or contracted to be sold,⁸² the fair retail price of the property,⁸³ the "reasonable value" of the property,⁸⁴ the par value,⁸⁵ or its fair value to the owner.⁸⁶ If the property has little or no market value, and is of a special or higher value to plaintiff, the value to be taken as the measure of recovery is the actual and fair value to plaintiff,⁸⁷ provided it is not merely fanciful or sentimental.⁸⁸ Where there is no market value for the goods in controversy, other standards, including the replacement value, may be used to determine the value of the goods.⁸⁹ Moreover, the market value will never be adhered to as the absolute measure of recovery where to do so would be a departure from the more fundamental principle of just compensation for the injury or loss sustained by reason of the conversion.⁹⁰

Where plaintiff has contracted to sell the property to a solvent purchaser at a specified price and the conversion prevents the carrying out of the contract either because the property is not obtainable on the market⁹¹ or plaintiff does not know of the conversion until it is too late to go into the market and get property to fulfill the contract,⁹² the measure of recovery is the actual value to plaintiff, which is the price he would have received under the contract. If, because of the expense and cost of putting the property in the place and condition it was in before removed by the converter, the property was of greater value as in use than as property being sold on the market, plaintiff is entitled to the actual value of the property as in use rather than its value on the market;⁹³ but the value of the property as in use cannot be taken as the measure of damages where the conversion does not violate a right to continue a particular use of the property in a particular place, but merely violates plaintiff's right to have possession of the property and remove it from the place where it has been put to a particular use.⁹⁴ Where the property has one value for the purpose for which such property is normally intended, and another value for some other purpose to which it could be put, it is the former value that is to be taken as the measure of damages rather than the latter.⁹⁵ and the measure of damages is the value of the whole article; but if the part not converted remains of some value, damages are limited to the extent that the property was deprived of its value to the plaintiff.

If the conversion of part of an article destroys the value of the entire article, so that the part not converted is worthless to plaintiff, the conversion is regarded as a conversion of the whole so that the ordinary measure of damages is the value of the whole article with interest;⁹⁶ but if the part not converted remains of some value, after the conversion, the damages are limited to the extent that the property was deprived of its value to plaintiff.⁹⁷ The difference between a conversion which is only partial or temporary and one in which the property is wholly made away with is one affecting the damages only, the damages go to the whole value of the property in the one case, and are commonly less in the other.⁹⁸

§ 167. — Of What Place

As a general rule the value to be taken is that of the place where the conversion occurred.

As a general rule the value to be taken is that of the place where the conversion occurred;⁹⁹ but if there is no market value for such or like property at the place of conversion the measure of damages may be fixed by taking the market value at the nearest or principal market, and deducting the cost of getting the property to that place;¹ and, should the conversion occur while the property is in the course of transportation to a particular market, the damages are to be measured by the market value at the place of destination, less the cost of carriage and the cost of effecting a sale in that market.² In at least one jurisdiction, it is the rule that, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, if chattels wrongfully taken or converted are still in defendant's possession at the time of trial, plaintiff may, at his election, recover the present value of the chattels at the place where they were taken or converted, in the form they were in when so taken or converted.³ Under some statutory provisions the place of conversion is not considered as an element in fixing the value of the property converted.⁴

It is usually conceded that the value as it existed at the time of the conversion is, in general, the measure of damages in trover, unless the property is of fluctuating value, in which case a different measure may be applied.

number of states have adhered to this rule despite the fact that the property is subject to subsequent fluctuations in value,⁶ although in such circumstances departures have been made in many jurisdictions.⁷ Under statutes so providing, plaintiff is often allowed to elect between the value at the time of the conversion with interest, or the highest value from the time of the conversion up to the time of the trial, without interest, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence,⁸ and in a few jurisdictions if there has been a fluctuation in value subsequent to the conversion the jury may, in their discretion, fix the damages at the highest value between the time of the conversion and the time of trial.⁹

According to other cases, if the property converted is by nature a thing of fluctuating value, and the value increases after the conversion, plaintiff may have as his damages the highest value between the time of the conversion and the time of trial,¹⁰ but this latter rule has received several qualifications or modifications, some cases stating that the action must have been prosecuted with reasonable diligence,¹¹ others holding that the time within which the highest market value can be taken is limited to a reasonable time after the conversion,¹² and still

In Pennsylvania

(1) The statute, providing that damages for conversion of property shall be limited to difference between proceeds of conversion and such higher value as property may have reached within reasonable time after notice of conversion, has been construed to allow recovery of highest value between date of conversion and reasonable time after notice thereof, and not to prevent recovery of value at date of conversion, since the statute merely limits recovery of damages in excess of value at date of conversion.—Foley v. Wasserman, 179 A. 595, 319 Pa. 420.

(2) Under earlier decisions plaintiff was entitled to the highest value between the time of conversion and the time of trial.—Leacock v. Paxson, 57 A. 1097, 208 Pa. 602—Bank of Montgomery v. Reese, 26 Pa. 143.

Intention of parties to be considered

Where it was the intention of the parties to sell the property at a definite time, or price, that intention mediate value, between the time of the conversion and a reasonable time after notice thereof within which to enable the owner to replace the property, which is to be taken as the measure of damages.¹³

Where the taking is willful and without color of right,¹⁴ or is willful, intentional, or the result of culpable negligence,¹⁵ the measure of recovery has been held to be the value of the property at the time demand is made for its return, or its highest market value between the date of conversion and the filing of suit for damages;¹⁶ and where property has been obtained by fraud, plaintiff may recover its value at the time of the conversion, or its value at any time prior to the trial of the cause.¹⁷ In a statute providing that the measure of damages should be the highest market value between the conversion and the verdict, the term "verdict" includes findings of a court trying a case without a jury,¹⁸ and refers to that verdict which finally decides the case.¹⁹

Replacement of property by plaintiff. Although the situation is one where ordinarily plaintiff would be entitled to highest value until time of trial, if plaintiff during the intermediate period replaces the property at less than the highest price, he will be limited to the price paid.²⁰

§ 169. — Increased Value Due to Expenditure of Converter

Under the majority rule, where the property has been enhanced by labor or expenditure of the converter, the plaintiff may recover such enhanced value, without deduction for the defendant's labor or expense where the conversion was willful or intentional, but not where it was in good faith or under a bona fide claim of right.

Under the majority rule, where the property has been enhanced in value by labor or expenditure of the converter, plaintiff may recover such enhanced value, without deduction for defendant's labor or expense, where the conversion was willful or intentional,²¹ but not where it was in good faith or under a bona fide claim of right.²² Some courts, however, unqualifiedly deny recovery for any enhancement in value due to act or expenditure of defendant after the conversion,²³ while a few other cases have gone to the opposite extreme and allowed recovery for such an enhancement in value, existing at any time plaintiff might have recovered the property in specie, irrespective of the good faith of defendant.²⁴ If defendant has innocently purchased from the original converter, defendant is entitled to deductions for such enhancement in value as he himself has added to the property;²⁵ and as to enhancements made by the original converter defendant is entitled to a deduction if the original conversion was innocent and without bad faith,²⁶ but not if the original conversion was willful.²⁷

§ 170. Damages Other than, or in Addition to, Value of Property

While some cases limit recovery strictly to the value of the converted property with interest, as a general rule, if special damages are pleaded and proved, the should be considered in determining the time within which to limit the inquiry as to the market price of the property converted.—Scott v. Rogers, 31 N.Y. 676, 4 Abb. Dec. 157—25 C.J. p 398 note 9.

Time and place of conversion

In landowner's action for conversion of logs against boom company and logging company which converted logs after original conversion by logger, time and place of conversion were established by determining when and where defendants asserted dominion over logs and disposed of them by sale to landowner's prejudice.—*Watkins v. plaintiff may recover for all injuries or losses sustained as a direct and proximate result of the conversion.

While some cases display a tendency to limit recovery strictly to the value of the converted property with interest,²⁸ as a general rule, if the special damages are pleaded and proved, plaintiff may recover in trover for all injuries or losses that he has sustained as a direct and proximate result of the conversion;²⁹ but there can be no recovery for losses or injuries which are too remote and uncertain,³⁰ or which plaintiff could have avoided by the exercise of ordinary diligence.³¹ In an action for conversion, the buyer's admission of the seller's title to the goods, taken by the seller from the buyer's store after forcible entry, precludes the buyer from claiming damages to his credit and reputation.³²

§ 171. — Interest

Except in cases where a value higher than that existing at the time of the conversion is allowed as the measure of damages, it is usually held that a sum equal to the legal rate of interest on the value of the property from the time of conversion to the time the verdict is rendered is a recoverable element of damages.

Election by plaintiff

In action for conversion of personal property, upon judgment rendered in his favor, plaintiff could properly elect to have interest allowed on the property from date of conversion, even though value of the property is in dispute or amount of property converted is to be determined by the court or jury; but under statute interest on special damages would run from time of verdict.—Gillbreath v. Armstrong, 193 P.2d 630, 121 Mont. 387.

Interest on judgment

In suit for conversion against lessee of pipe and purchaser from lessee, interest on judgment against purchaser would be awarded from date suit was instituted against him.—Callahan v. White, Tex.Civ.App., 139 S.W.2d 129.

On review

On reversal of final decree fixing certain sums found due interest on amounts found due by reviewing court should be brought down to date

age, although in some states recovery of interest from the time of the conversion is denied if the damages are of an unliquidated nature.³⁶ According to some authorities the allowance or refusal of interest from the date of the conversion, as an item of damage, is a matter within the discretion of the jury;³⁷ but there are others which hold that the interest is a necessary part of a complete indemnity to which plaintiff is entitled as a matter of legal right.³⁸ Where defendant has innocently purchased the property from the original or willful converter it has been held that interest runs not from the date of the conversion but from the date that demand has been made by plaintiff.³⁹

§ 172. — Detention or Loss of Use

Generally, where the value of the property is recoverable, the plaintiff is limited to that sum with interest and cannot recover anything for the value of the use of the property during the period he was deprived of it; but there are authorities which allow the plaintiff compensation for the use or detention of the property.

As a general rule, where the value of the property is recoverable, plaintiff is limited to that sum with interest and may recover nothing for the value of the use of the property during the period he was deprived of it.⁴⁰ However, it has been held proper to allow plaintiff compensation for the use or detention of the property where this is necessary completely to indemnify plaintiff for the natural and probable consequences of defendant's wrong;⁴¹ but such compensation is not allowable where the loss of use did not result in damage.⁴² Where plaintiff has regained the property, it is sometimes held that the value of the use of the property, during the period intervening between its conversion and its return, is to be allowed as an element of damages.⁴³

If plaintiff has only a special interest entitling him to use the property for a specified period his damages recoverable against the general owner are the value of the use of the property during the residue of the period he was entitled to use it.⁴⁴ If plaintiff recovers for the usable value of the property he cannot ask for depreciation covering the same period of time,⁴⁵ or interest, since recovery for use takes the place of interest.⁴⁶

§ 173. — Increase of, or Dividends or Interest on, Converted Property

While there may be a recovery for the value of increases which take place prior to the conversion, it is usually held that there can be no such recovery for increases which take place after the conversion.

While there may be a recovery for the value of increases which have come into existence before the conversion, and have been converted with the property,⁴⁷ it is usually held that there can be no reof new final decree—Dow v. Brookline Trust Co., 31 N.E.2d 13, 308 Mass 90

Refusal of interest held not an abuse of discretion

In a suit for value of securities showing that the damages were unliquidated and in dispute, where there was considerable delay in bringing the action to trial, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow interest prior to the decree—City of Fort Worth v. McCamey, C. C.A. Tex., 93 F.2d 964, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 1041, 304 U.S. 571, 82 L.Ed. 1535.

In absence of conversion

Where defendant, appealing from judgment, delivered to plaintiff a certified check, pursuant to agreement, in lieu of undertaking to stay execution, and plaintiff cashed check and kept proceeds in safe deposit box, and where defendant paid amount to which judgment was reduced by court of appeals, plaintiff was not liable for interest on the deposit on theory that the cashing of check constituted conversion.—*Woollard v. covery for increases which have come into existence after the conversion has taken place.⁴⁸ Thus, there can be no recovery for the value of wool which has been sheared from sheep previously converted.⁴⁹ However, it has been held, that if the converter deprives the true owner of a race horse and enters the horse in races from which he collects purses, the money so collected would belong to the true owner, less amounts deductible for expenses incurred in caring for the horse.⁵⁰ Accumulated dividends earned prior to the date of the conversion of stock are proper elements of damage;⁵¹ and, where plaintiff has been awarded the highest intermediate value, in a jurisdiction allowing such recovery, he is also entitled to all dividends earned by the stock down to the time the value is fixed by the jury;⁵² but it has been held that there can be no recovery for dividends earned after the date of the conversion,⁵³ although there is authority to the effect that there can be recovery for interest which defendant has collected on a promissory note after its conversion.⁵⁴

§ 174. — Expenses of Pursuing or Recovering Property

As a general rule, reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in recovering the property are a proper element of damage.

As a general rule, reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in recovering the property are a proper element of damage;⁵⁵ and this rule applies although the defendant is one who innocently acted as agent for the original converter in selling the property to third persons;⁵⁶ but for expenses which have been incurred solely because of the acts of the original converter there can be no recovery from an innocent purchaser of the property.⁵⁷ According to some cases, expenses incurred in searching for or pursuing the property are a recoverable element of damage although they have not resulted in a recovery of the property by plaintiff;⁵⁸ but as to this there is also authority to the contrary.⁵⁹ Expenses incurred in having defendant arrested, after plaintiff discovers the theft of his property, are not necessary to recovery of the property and are not recoverable items of damage.⁶⁰

§ 175. — Attorney's Fees and Costs and Expenses of Suit

As a general rule the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, in addition to the regularly taxable costs, for attorney's fees or other expenses involved in the prosecution of the instant action, except as provided for by statute.

As a general rule plaintiff is not entitled to recover, in addition to the regularly taxable costs, for attorney's fees⁶¹ or other expenses involved in the prosecution of the instant action against the defendant,⁶² except as provided for by statute.⁶³ Attorney's fees which do not grow out of the instant suit against defendant, but have been incurred in litigation against a third person for the recovery of the property, may properly be considered as elements of damage;⁶⁴ and where plaintiff has a security interest in the converted property to secure not only the principal debt, but also attorney's fees incurred in collecting the debt, the attorney's fees may be added to the principal debt as the amount of plaintiff's recovery if the total does not exceed the value of the property.⁶⁵

§ 176. — Profits Derived from Sale by Defendant

Although there is some authority to the contrary, it has been held that if the defendant sells the property at a price in excess of its market value at the time of the conversion, the plaintiff may, at his option, elect the price at which the property was sold as his measure of damages.

According to some cases, if defendant sells the property at a price in excess of the market value of the property at the time of the conversion, plaintiff may, at his option, elect the price at which the property was sold as his measure of damages,⁶⁶ with interest from the time of sale to the date of trial;⁶⁷ but there is other authority which limits recovery strictly to the value at the time of the conversion and will not allow plaintiff an increased amount at which defendant has subsequently sold the property.⁶⁸

§ 177. — Mental Anguish

Ordinarily, in the absence of a malicious intent to harm the plaintiff, the latter cannot recover for mental anguish in an action for conversion.

If there has been no malicious intent to harm plaintiff the latter's mental anguish or humiliation is not ordinarily a proper element of damage in actions for the conversion of personal property.⁶⁹

§ 178. — Loss of Profits and Injuries to Trade or Business

While it has been held that there can be no recovery, in an action for conversion, for an injury to business or loss of profits of a speculative and uncertain nature, it is often held that there can be a recovery for such losses if they are shown with certainty.

While it has been held absolutely that injuries to business are not recoverable as damages in trover,⁷⁰

and there can be no recovery for loss of profits⁷¹ or injuries to business⁷² of a speculative and uncertain nature, it is often held that if it is shown with certainty that defendant's conversion has resulted in a loss of profits,⁷³ injuries to plaintiff's business,⁷⁴ or prevented plaintiff from carrying on his usual trade or employment,⁷⁵ the losses so sustained are recoverable elements of damages, except in so far as they could have been avoided or minimized by the exercise of due diligence on the part of plaintiff.⁷⁶ There can be no recovery for loss of profits where the nature of the article or the circumstances are not such that the loss might reasonably be supposed to follow from the conversion.⁷⁷ The fact that the fulfillment of a contract is prevented by the conversion is not ground for special damages where the same contract is subsequently performed and all profits are made that would have sooner been made had the conversion not occurred.⁷⁸

§ 179. — Expense of Replacing Converted Property

It has been held that there can be no recovery for the expense of replacing the converted property, or for the inability to replace the object of the conversion.

It has been held that plaintiff may not recover more than the value of the property because he was forced to hire other property to carry on his business;⁷⁹ and the inability to replace that which has been lost, destroyed, or converted, does not produce an element of damage in addition to that which has been lost, destroyed, or converted.⁸⁰

§ 180. Mitigation or Reduction of Damages

Generally, the defendant is entitled to show in mitigation or reduction of damages any facts or circumstances which would tend to reduce the amount required to compensate the plaintiff for the actual loss he has sustained.

As a general rule defendant is entitled to show in mitigation or reduction of damages any facts or circumstances which would tend to reduce the amount required justly to compensate plaintiff for the actual loss he has sustained as the proximate result of defendant's act.⁸¹ Where plaintiff is indebted to defendant the amount of indebtedness must be deducted from the reasonable value of the converted property to determine the correct amount due plaintiff.⁸² Where the property of plaintiff wrongfully converted was not fully paid for, the amount unpaid may not be deducted from the award against defendant, since plaintiff is still obligated to pay the balance owing on the property.⁸³ If defendant wrongfully converts property which he has sold plaintiff, and on which there remains an unpaid balance of the purchase price, plaintiff is entitled to recover what he has paid without regard to depreciation of the property.⁸⁴

§ 181. — Brevity of Detention by Defendant

In an action for conversion, brevity of detention cannot be shown in mitigation of damages.

The fact that defendant himself detained the property only for a short period cannot be shown in mitigation of damages.⁸⁵

§ 182. — Motive or Intent of Defendant

The defendant's motive and intent in converting the property do not affect plaintiff's right to recover for damages actually sustained.

The motive and intent of defendant in converting the property do not affect the right of plaintiff to recover the damages actually sustained.⁸⁶

§ 183. — Subsequent Right to Take Property Lawfully

Where the premature exercise of what would otherwise have been a legal right to take the property constitutes the conversion, the defendant cannot show in mitigation his legal right to take the property after the conversion.

Where the conversion consists in taking the property by the premature exercise of what would otherwise have been a legal right to take the property, defendant cannot mitigate the damages by showing that he could legally have taken the property within a short time after the conversion.⁸⁷

§ 184. — Expenses of Conserving or Caring for Property

Although there is authority to the contrary, ordinarily the defendant can show in mitigation expenses incurred in protecting or preserving the property.

Ordinarily defendant, in an action of conversion, is entitled to have allowed in mitigation of damages any expenses he has incurred in protecting or preserving the property in controversy.⁸⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that defendant cannot recover anything for the expense of storing the converted property.⁸⁹

§ 185. — Attachment by Plaintiff

The fact that the plaintiff, in an action of trover, attached the property while in the defendant's hands is not ground for mitigation where the attaching officer returned the property to the defendant and the latter retained it.

The fact that plaintiff, in bringing his action of trover, has attached the converted property while in the hands of defendant affords no ground for mitigation of damages where the attaching officer has returned the property to the defendant and it has since been retained by him.⁹⁰

§ 186. — Offer to Return or Restore Property

Although there are some cases to the contrary, the generally declared and followed rule is that an unaccepted tender or offer to return the property or other property of like species, quantity, and quality cannot be considered in mitigation of damages.

There are a number of cases to the effect that an offer to return the property should be considered in mitigation of damages where it is made shortly after a conversion which is technical or inadvertent, and while the property remains unchanged and uninjured;⁹¹ but the rule, as generally declared and followed, is that an unaccepted tender or offer to return the particular property,⁹² or other property of like species, quantity, and quality,⁹³ cannot be considered in mitigation of damages. An attempt to plead and prove a qualified return in mitigation of the damages is not permissible, since one who wrongfully converts personalty should not be allowed to state a condition which the owner of the property is bound to comply with in order to have the property returned to him.⁹⁴ Where property has been stolen and sold to defendant, and some items thereof have been sold by him and others demolished, the owner is under no duty to accept defendant's offer of remaining property.⁹⁵

§ 187. — Return or Recovery of Property

Although the plaintiff's repossession of the property will not bar his action in trover, it is generally held that repossession of the property is to be considered in reduction or mitigation of damages.

Although the fact that plaintiff has regained possession of the property will not bar his cause of action in trover, as discussed supra § 86, it is generally held that plaintiff's repossession of the property is to be considered in reduction or mitigation of damages,⁹⁶ so that the general measure of damages in such cases, if no other and special damages are shown, is the difference between the value of the property at the time it was converted and its value at the time it was regained by plaintiff,⁹⁷ unless the resumption of possession is in some way qualified so that plaintiff does not resume dominion over the property as owner,⁹⁸ or the repossession is a temporary and useless one from which plaintiff derives no substantial benefit or reparation,⁹⁹ or the repossession was acquired only by purchase by plaintiff from defendant who still retains the proceeds.¹ A surrender of the property to one who has no title or right of possession will not operate to mitigate the damages.²

Stipulation as to effect of return. The fact that plaintiff accepts a return of the property under a stipulation that it is to be without prejudice to his cause of action for conversion does not prevent defendant from mitigating the damages by showing a return of the property.³

§ 188. — Application of Property to Use of Plaintiff or Owner

It has been held that the defendant cannot show in mitigation that he has, by his own act without the aid of a valid legal process or the plaintiff's consent, applied the property or its proceeds on a debt owed by the plaintiff to the defendant or to a third person; but there is also authority to the contrary.

According to some cases, defendant cannot claim a mitigation of damages by showing that he has, by his own act without the aid of a valid legal process or the consent of plaintiff, applied the property or its proceeds on a debt owed by plaintiff to defendant⁴ or to a third person;⁵ but there are other authorities which will consider in mitigation either an application to a debt due a third person⁶ or a debt owed to defendant himself.⁷ It has been held that a purchaser from an original converter can show in mitigation of damages that the latter applied the proceeds of the purchase in payment of a debt owed by plaintiff to a third person;⁸ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁹

Should the property, while it is in the hands of defendant wrongdoer, be taken from his possession by valid legal process in favor of another, and applied to a debt due from the owner to the third person, such application may be shown in mitigation of damages;¹⁰ and, according to some authorities, an application of the property to the owner's debt by means of a valid legal process, subsequent to the prior tortious conversion, may be shown in mitigation of damages although the process and application are in favor of defendant;¹¹ but on this latter point there is also authority to the contrary.¹²

Consent to, or ratification of, application by plaintiff. If plaintiff accepts or ratifies defendant's application of the property to the payment of plain-tiff's debts, such application may be shown in mitigation of damages.¹³

§ 189. — Deduction of Sums Received

As a general rule, there will be deducted from the plaintiff's recovery all sums that he has received on account of the property, either from the defendant, or the latter's predecessor in interest.

As a general rule, there will be deducted from plaintiff's recovery all sums that he has received on account of the property, either from defendant¹⁴ or the latter's predecessor in interest.¹⁵ A payment by one of two joint converters to obtain a personal release for himself will be deducted from plaintiff's recovery against the other converter,¹⁶ and the damages may be reduced by a showing that a third person has made a partial payment in discharge of the debt incurred by the conversion;¹⁷ but payment by a third person will form no basis for a reduction if it was not paid or accepted in discharge of the liability for the conversion.¹⁸ Furthermore, a converter is not entitled to a deduction from the usual measure of damages because of a debt owed by plaintiff to a third person with respect to the property converted.¹⁹ adhere to the general rule that the value to be taken is the value which existed at the time of conversion, even in the case of stock of fluctuating value, there are authorities which apply a different rule in such cases.

As a general rule, plaintiff is limited to the market value of the stock and he cannot recover the higher price at which he has purchased it²⁰ or contracted to sell it to a third person,²¹ or the par value of the stock.²² If the stock has no market value the value to be taken is the actual value,²³ as shown by the dividend earning capacity of the stock,²⁴ and by the value of the property and business of the corporation after deducting its liabilities.²⁵

While many authorities, even in the case of stocks of fluctuating value, conform to the general rule that the value to be taken is that value which existed at the time of the conversion,²⁶ there are cases, where the stock has subsequently increased in value, following the rule allowing plaintiff the highest value intermediate the conversion and the trial;²⁷ but this rule has been to a great extent modified by the adoption of the more recent and widely followed New York rule, which limits plaintiff to the highest intermediate value between the time he receives notice of the conversion and a reasonable time thereafter within which he can replace the stock.²⁸ This rule does not, however, preclude plaintiff from recovering instead the amount of the proceeds received on a sale by the converter.²⁹

The case originally promulgating this rule contained a clear implication that it applied only where plaintiff had not paid for the stock in full or was not the absolute owner thereof;³⁰ and in apparent adoption of this limitation it has been stated that where plaintiff has paid for the stock in full he is entitled to the highest value between the time of conversion and trial;³¹ but it was subsequently held in New York, that the rule was equally applicable to a case where plaintiff was absolute owner of the stock and such plaintiff was likewise limited to the highest value within a reasonable time after notice of the conversion in which to replace the stock.³² There is some authority to the effect that plaintiff, under the New York rule, is limited to the highest value within a reasonable time after notice of the conversion in which to replace the stock, although the stock has a higher value at the time of the conversion;³³ but there are other authorities holding that plaintiff is entitled to at least the value at the time of the conversion if the value subsequently decreases.³⁴ It has been held that, where the stock reaches a higher value between the time of the conversion and the time plaintiff receives notice of the conversion, this value is not the measure of damages, but plaintiff is limited to the value at the time of the conversion or the highest value between the time of notice of the conversion and a reasonable time thereafter.³⁵

Certificates. In some jurisdictions the conversion of a certificate of stock is regarded as the same thing as a conversion of the stock itself so that plaintiff's measure of damages is the value of the stock represented by the certificate,³⁶ irrespective of whether the conversion actually deprives the plaintiff of his rights as a shareholder;³⁷ and such is universally the measure of damages where the conversion involves a wrongful use of the certificate which deprives plaintiff of his ownership or rights as a shareholder;³⁸ but it has been held that where only the certificate is converted, so that plaintiff has in no way lost his rights as a shareholder, the measure of damages is not the market value of the stock but rather compensation for the loss and expense plaintiff has actually sustained by reason of the conversion.³⁹

Conversion of stock certificate belonging to an infant. One who steals from a child of tender years should be held to a greater degree of civil liability because of the ease with which the theft can be accomplished and the likelihood of a long lapse of time before discovery;⁴⁰ and the policy of the courts to protect infants should be followed when fixing a rule of damages to be applied against those who have taken an infant's property.⁴¹ Thus, with respect to damages recoverable for the conversion of an infant's stock certificate, an infant should not be forced to depend on the judgment of relatives or any one else for the sole purpose of diminishing liability which a wrongdoer toward the infant merits as a consequence of his acts.⁴² Furthermore, the reasonable time for fixing damages when the conversion is discovered should be longer in such cases than in other cases.⁴³

§ 192. — Gold or Silver

The measure of damages for the conversion of gold coin or silver bullion is the value of the property in currency.

The measure of damages for the conversion of gold coin⁴⁴ or silver bullion⁴⁵ is the value of the property in currency.

Ordinarily, the measure of damages for the conversion of money is the amount thereof with legal interest from the date of conversion; but if the defendant has loaned the money and received interest thereon the plaintiff may recover the amounts actually received and not merely the legal rate of interest.

Where money has been converted the measure of damages is ordinarily its amount with legal interest from the date of the conversion;⁴⁶ but if defendant has loaned the money and received interest thereon plaintiff may recover the amounts actually received and is not limited merely to the legal rate of interest.⁴⁷ Where the conversion of money, set aside for the purpose of discharging a lien on the real estate of plaintiff, results in the land being sold to satisfy the lien, plaintiff cannot recover as special damages whatever amount he may choose to pay the purchaser for the latter's interest but he will be limited to the reasonable and fair value of the interest acquired by the purchaser.⁴⁸

§ 194. — Choses in Action and Evidences of Indebtedness

Prima facie the amount which appears to be due on the face of the instrument is the measure of damages for the conversion of commercial paper or evidences of indebtedness; however, the ultimate measure is not its face value but its actual value.

Prima facie the amount which appears to be due on the face of the instrument is the measure of damages for the conversion of commercial paper or evidences of indebtedness,⁴⁹ such as promissory notes⁵⁰ and bonds.⁵¹ So, also, the rule has been applied to drafts or bills,⁵² checks,⁵³ bank books,⁵⁴ certificates of deposit,⁵⁵ accounts receivable,⁵⁶ and a judgment.⁵⁷ However, the ultimate measure of damages for the conversion of such instruments is not their face value but rather their actual value,⁵⁸ which may be less than the face value because of the insolvency or inability of the debtor to pay,⁵⁹ his neglect or refusal to pay,⁶⁰ an unsuccessful attempt to collect on the instrument by suit,⁶¹ payment in whole or in part,⁶² nonenforceability or invalidity of the instrument,⁶³ or any other fact which would affect or diminish the value of the instrument in the hands of the owner.⁶⁴

On the other hand, the damages recoverable for conversion of a bond payable in gold may be more than its face value in currency where bonds payable in gold are of higher value than bonds for the same amount in currency.⁶⁵ If the instrument converted is shown to have a market value on a regular market, it is the market value that is to be taken as the measure of damages rather than the face value.⁶⁶ Where a converted note imposes no personal liability on the maker, but is collectable only from property mortgaged to secure it, the measure of damages is not the face value of the note but its value as measured by the value of its security at the date of the conversion.⁶⁷

§ 195. — Title, Deeds, Insurance Policies, and Other Documents

Where a document evidencing a property right or title is converted by the grantor or obligor in the document, it has been held that the plaintiff's measure of damages is the value of the property or right described in the document.

Where a document evidencing a property right or title, such as a bond for the conveyance of land,⁶⁸ or a certificate of membership in a board of trade,⁶⁹ is converted by the grantor or obligor in the document, it has been held that plaintiff's measure of damages is the value of the property or right described in the document. Since possession of a warehouse receipt is regarded, in law, as possession of the property itself, it has been held that the measure of damages for the conversion of a warehouse receipt is the value of the property represented by the receipt.⁷⁰ Ordinarily, however, where evidences of title, such as school land certificates,⁷¹ bonds for the conveyance of land,⁷² or executory land contracts,⁷³ have been converted by one other than the grantor or obligor, and plaintiff's title or right is in no way affected by the conversion, the measure of damages is not the value of the property, but such sum as will recompense plaintiff for any actual loss he has sustained, and for his trouble and expenses in establishing and perpetuating the evidence of his title.

Insurance policies. It has been said that, as a general rule, the measure of damages for the conversion of a policy of life insurance is its market value, or, if it has no market value, its actual value to plaintiff;⁷⁴ and, as against the insurer,⁷⁵ or as against one claiming to have incurred expense on behalf of a deceased insured in an insurance policy payable to any person who has incurred expense on behalf of the insured,⁷⁶ that the measure of damages is prima facie the face value of the policy. It has been held, however, that where the conversion of a fire insurance policy on a car, after its destruction by fire, does not extinguish plaintiff's right of action against the insurer, plaintiff's measure of damages is not the value of the car, to the extent it was covered by the insurance, but such sum as will compensate plaintiff for the inconvenience, trouble, and expense, that he has been put to by the conversion.⁷⁷ Recovery for conversion of a health and accident insurance policy has been held limited to the inconvenience suffered by plaintiff as a result of the conversion.⁷⁸

§ 196. — Heirlooms and Articles Kept for Personal or Family Use

According to the great weight of authority the measure of damages for the conversion of household goods and other articles kept for personal use, is not the second hand market value of the property, but the actual and fair value to the owner, excluding any fanciful or sentimental value he may place on it.

According to the great weight of authority the measure of damages for the conversion of household goods,⁷⁹ furniture,⁸⁰ books,⁸¹ manuscripts,⁸² or wearing apparel,⁸³ kept and adapted for personal use, is not the second hand market value of the property, but the actual and fair value to the owner, excluding any fanciful or sentimental value he may place on it. An automobile, however, is an article commonly bought and sold in the market, having no special value to the owner,⁸⁴ and the measure of damages for its conversion is the market value at the time and place of conversion with interest.⁸⁵

Heirlooms and keepsakes. In fixing the damages for the conversion of keepsakes⁸⁶ or heirlooms,⁸⁷ which are of considerable sentimental value to the owner, consideration may be given to the sentiments and feelings of the owner.

§ 197. — Models

Where the plaintiff has created a model, but has not copyrighted it, the measure of damages for its conversion is the cost of production rather than any peculiar value it may have as a product of the plaintiff's mind.

Where plaintiff has created a model, which is the original product of his mind, but has not copyrighted it, so that anyone can copy or reproduce the article without being liable to the owner, the measure of damages for a conversion of the model is its cost of production rather than any peculiar value it may have as a product of plaintiff's mind.⁸⁸ If the conversion of the model of a patented article deprives plaintiff of the use and benefit of the invention and prevents him from carrying out a contract with a third person, the losses thus sustained are recoverable as damages.⁸⁹ Where the property alleged to have been converted consisted of drawings, models, and tools, which have become obsolete by reason of changes made in the machine involved in connection with its manufacture in quantity, the cost of the property is not a fair measure of their worth, but neither will nominal damages suffice to compensate plaintiff, since property may have some substantial value even as junk.⁹⁰

§ 198. — Property Attached to, or Part of, Realty

The general rule is that there may be a recovery for the enhanced value of property severed from realty, without deduction for the converter's labor or expense, where the severed property was willfully or intentionally taken and converted.

While some cases, despite the willfulness of the conversion, limit recovery to the value of the property when it first became a chattel by severance from the realty,⁹¹ and others without respect to the good faith of the converter allow recovery for any enhancement in value that has been added

while plaintiff could have recovered the property in specie,⁹² the majority of courts allow recovery for the enhanced value, without deduction for the converter's labor or expense, where the severed property was willfully or intentionally taken and converted,⁹³ but not where the property has been converted innocently or in good faith.⁹⁴ As to the precise allowance or measure of recovery in these latter cases there is considerable variance among the authorities.⁹⁵ Some of the cases fix the measure of recovery at the value of the property immediately after its severance from the realty, so that no deduction is allowed for the converter's labor or expense in transforming the property into a chattel.⁹⁶ Others fix the measure of recovery at the value of the property after it has been severed and also completely removed from the land,⁹⁷ while a considerable number of cases take the reverse attitude and limit recovery to the value of the property immediately prior to its severance from the realty.⁹⁸

Although defendant has innocently purchased the severed property from one who willfully converted it and enhanced its value by subsequent labor or expenditures, the measure of damages is the enhanced value of the property at the time it was sold to defendant;⁹⁹ but if the original conversion was innocent the enhanced value, due to the labors or expenditures of the converter, cannot be recovered from an innocent purchaser from the latter.¹ A statute which in substance applies the foregoing rules to the case where timber is cut and carried away has been held to be merely declaratory of well recognized principles of the general law.² Where defendant was to receive all the lumber cut from a timber tract by plaintiff at a specified price and plaintiff sold some of the lumber defendant should have received, defendant is entitled to re-

Crops. Where trover is brought for the conversion of crops the measure of damages is the market value of the crops rather than the rental value of the land on which they were grown.⁴

Injuries to freehold. If trover is brought for articles which have been wrongfully severed from the real estate, there can be no recovery for the trespass or injuries to the freehold.⁵

§ 199. Exemplary and Double Damages

Generally, exemplary damages may be awarded if the conversion is characterized by malice, willfulness, fraud, oppression, or a reckless or wanton disregard of the plaintiff's rights.

Although there is authority holding that exemplary damages may not be allowed in an action for conversion,⁶ generally, exemplary damages may be awarded if the conversion is characterized by malice, willfulness, fraud, or oppression,⁷ or by a reckless or wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights;⁸ but such damages will be denied if none of these elements are present.⁹ Exemplary damages can be recovered only because of the nature of the act constituting the conversion for which plaintiff is also entitled to recover other damages.¹⁰ If plaintiff bases two causes of action on the same wrongful act he cannot recover exemplary damages in both causes of action as this would constitute double punishment to defendant for a single wrongful act.¹¹ The assessment of punitive damages is not precluded by the fact that the act complained of is a crime for which defendant could be criminally punished,¹² or the fact that the value of the prop-

Malice

(1) "Malice" as a basis for punitive damages for the conversion of personality means the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse, and this requires that defendant not only intended to do the wrongful act, but that he knew it was wrongful when he did it.—Hussey v. Ellerman, Mo.App., 215 S.W.2d 38—Luhmann v. Schaefer, Mo.App., 112 S.W.2d 1088—Spitzengel v. Greenlease Motor Car Co., 136 S.W.2d 100, 234 Mo.App. 962.

(2) Proof that converter was actuated by personal ill will, spite, or hostility toward plaintiff, is unnecessary.—Detmer v. Miller, Mo.App., 220 S.W.2d 739.

In determining punitive damages for conversion of cotton, plaintiff's difficulty in paying taxes and tenant's abandonment of farms cannot be considered, but expenses incurred, including attorneys' fees although not recoverable may be considered in determining punitive damages.—Security State Bank v. Spinner, Tex.Civ. App., 55 S.W.2d 128, error dismissed.

erty converted cannot be accurately ascertained.¹³

Mitigation of exemplary damages. The fact that defendant shortly after the conversion offers to return the property may be considered in mitigation of exemplary damages based on malice.¹⁴

Double damages. Statutes imposing double damages are penal in nature and will be strictly construed so as to avoid the imposition of such damages where the case is not within the evident purpose of the statute.¹⁵

§ 200. Amount

While noninal damages are recoverable in actions for trover and conversion, as discussed supra § 161, generally, the value of the property at the time and place of conversion, as considered supra § 164, determines the amount of recovery, but there are cases in which damages other than, or in addition to, the value are recoverable, as pointed out supra §§ 170-179, and, as considered supra § 199, exemplary and double damages may also be recovered.

§ 201. Excessive or Inadequate Damages

Since the amount of damages is largely within the discretion of the fact finding body, the courts usually will not interfere with its award as being excessive, unless the excess is due to passion or prejudice, or is not based on the evidence, or unless it results from the adoption of an erroneous measure of damages.

Since the amount of damages is largely within the discretion of the fact finding body, as discussed supra § 148, its award will usually not be interfered with by the court on the ground that it is excessive,¹⁶ unless the excess is so great as to indicate the influence of passion or prejudice,¹⁷ or there is no basis in the evidence for allowing the amount awarded,¹⁸ or the excess is due to the adoption of an erroneous measure of damages.¹⁹ While the jury are allowed an extremely wide range with reference to exemplary damages,²⁰ their award in this respect will be interfered with if it does not bear a reasonable proportion to the actual damages sustained.²¹

Inadequate damages. Although the evidence might have justified a larger award, the court will not interfere with the verdict on the ground that it is inadequate if there is nothing which clearly shows that the jury has failed to perform their duty.²²

VI. BAIL TROVER

§ 202. Nature and Purpose

In Georgia the statutory remedy of bail trover to recover possession of personal property wrongfully taken from the plaintiff lies where detinue, replevin, or trover lay at common law, and by it the plaintiff may recover possession or damages for conversion.

The action to recover personality is commonly called trover in Georgia²³ where it has been defined as the statutory right to recover the possession of any form of personal property which has been wrongfully taken from the possession of plaintiff.²⁴ The statutory action of trover lies where detinue, replevin, or trover lay at common law,²⁵ and its purpose is to ascertain title²⁶ and restore possession of particular property unlawfully converted or its equivalent in money,²⁷ or secure to plaintiff damages for its conversion,²⁸ although it has been said that its purpose is not so much to recover the specific chattels as to recover damages as for a conversion.²⁹ It is not the sole remedy of the owner,³⁰ but it may be maintained whenever an action of trespass will lie for the taking of a chattel.³¹

The statutory right on the trial to elect to take a verdict for the property or its value, considered infra § 235, does not change the nature of an action of trover so as to make it the equivalent of an action of assumpsit,³² and the action cannot, under any circumstances, be converted into an action on account for the price of property sold and delivered.³³ The action sounds in tort,³⁴ and conversion is the gist of the action.³⁵

§ 203. Property Subject to Bail Trover

Trover may be maintained for the wrongful conversion of every species of personal property which is the subject of private ownership and having some value.

Trover may be maintained for the wrongful conversion of every species of personal property, animate or inanimate,³⁶ which is the subject of private ownership and which belongs to plaintiff and is of some value to him, although it may have no commercial value.³⁷ Accordingly, trover lies for the recovery of tax receipts alleged to be of value to plaintiff;³⁸ deeds;³⁹ muniments of title to real property;⁴⁰ bonds for title;⁴¹ certificates of stock;⁴² promissory notes,⁴³ even though they are past due⁴⁴ and fully paid;⁴⁵ dogs;⁴⁶ slaves;⁴⁷ spirits of turpentine or resin manufactured from crude gum wrongfully extracted from plaintiff's growing trees;⁴⁸ cotton screws;⁴⁹ dwelling houses detached from the land,⁵⁰ although subsequently attached to the land of the wrongdoer;⁵¹ felled

Property in custodia legis is not subject to bail trover.⁵⁷

Recovery of money. An action for the recovery of money will lie on a legal obligation on the part of defendant to deliver specific money to plaintiff,⁵⁸ but it is not applicable to recovering a sum of money which may be due and unpaid.⁵⁹

Property wrongfully seized under execution may be the subject of a suit in trover.⁶⁰

§ 204. Right to Maintain Suit and Persons Liable

Every person who, personally or through an agent, converts personality of another, is liable in trover.

Every person is liable in trover who personally⁶¹

Deposits on bottles

Where plaintiff and defendant who were soft drink bottlers verbally agreed to follow general practice of demanding deposit for each bottle sent out and exchanging empty stray bottles of other dealer's product which had come into their possession, for their own bottles, the plaintiff upon accepting deposits on his bottles, which amounted to an "insurance" that if the bottles were not returned the deposits would be forfeited, no longer had clear title to the bottles, and could not recover them from defendant in action of trover until the tender to defendant of the deposit for each of plaintiff's bottles in possession of defendant.—Worth v. property therein, the actual possession, or the right of possession.⁷² Actual possession of a chattel at the time of the conversion thereof will sustain trover,⁷³ except as against the true owner or one claiming under him;⁷⁴ but title or right to property, general or special, must also be proved to be in plaintiff whenever his right of immediate possession cannot be otherwise shown.⁷⁵ The right to immediate possession may be a sufficient basis for the maintenance of the action.⁷⁶ It has been held that only actual possession of the land will sustain an action to recover the value of timber cut and removed therefrom.⁷⁷

Plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title,⁷⁸ which must be the legal,⁷⁹ not the equitable,⁸⁰ title, or on his right of possession lawfully acquired under contract;⁸¹ and the mere fact that he advanced the money whereby another obtained title,⁸² or that he was in possession of the property solely as agent of another,⁸³ is not sufficient to authorize him to maintain the suit. A bailee, however, has such title as will enable him to maintain the action.⁸⁴ So also has a warehouseman after he pays the rightful owner for cotton stored with him;⁸⁵ a bonded constable who has levied on the property;⁸⁶ notwithstanding he has deposited the property with an agent;⁸⁷ a person having a right of possession based on a qualified title;⁸⁸ the purchaser in possession of the property under a conditional sale,⁸⁹ even as against the seller who has reserved title⁹⁰ or his transferee;⁹¹ a surviving widow who was in possession of personal property of a decedent's estate at the time of its conversion by defendant;⁹² or the seller in a contract of sale whereby title is retained in him or his agent until payment of the purchase price,⁹³ but not where the

Connection with legal title

The rule, that plaintiff cannot recover where he relies on title to recover possession and his evidence shows paramount outstanding title in a third person, did not apply where plaintiff was shown to have such a connection with legal title of another as to give him the right of goods were sold on credit.⁹⁴ A defrauded seller may maintain trover, since for purposes of the action title to the property never passes to the buyer.⁹⁵

The transferee of the owner can maintain the action against the agent of the transferor in possession.⁹⁶ Title in plaintiff at the time suit is instituted is sufficient even though plaintiff may have thereafter divested himself of title.⁹⁷ Where an owner brings trover, and pending the action sells the property, and without objection amends his petition, making it a suit for the use of the vendee, the sale of the property does not defeat his right to recover.⁹⁸

Invalid title. A plaintiff who, when proof of title is essential, relies on one which is fraudulent or void, cannot recover.⁹⁹

§ 206. — Possession of, or Conversion by, Defendant

It is essential to an action of trover that the plaintiff show that the defendant has actual possession of the property, or that he converted it. Acts of the defendant must be positive and tortious.

It is essential, in order successfully to maintain an action of trover, that plaintiff show that defendant has actual possession of the property¹ or that he converted it.² Acts of defendant must be positive and tortious.³ Mere nonfeasance or neglect of some legal duty is not sufficient,⁴ and a mere breach of contract is not conversion,⁵ nor is destruction or loss of property as a result of negligence.⁶ It is generally not essential that defendant's motive or intent should be wrongful,⁷ and his good faith,⁸ or his knowledge or ignorance,⁹ is not involved in actions for conversion.

Any distinct act which is an unauthorized and wrongful assumption and exercise of control or dominion over the property of another in denial of, or inconsistent with the owner's rights, is a conversion,¹⁰ even though defendant does not apply the property to his own use.¹¹ Possession of property with a claim of title adverse to that of the true owner is a conversion,¹² but defendant cannot be charged with conversion unless he had actual or constructive possession at the time of the alleged conversion.¹³ It is not necessary that his possession should continue until the commencement of the action.¹⁴

the personal property of another is a conversion where it is unauthorized by, and is in denial of, the owner's rights; but a sale by an agent of the owner authorized to sell is not a conversion even though he exceeds his authority.¹⁸ No contractual relationship between plaintiff and defendant is necessary to maintain an action in trover, it being sufficient that defendant has converted to his own use the property of plaintiff.¹⁹ Trover will lie for conversion, even though the property has been destroyed before the commencement of the action,²⁰ or has been sold by defendant prior to demand and suit.²¹ Conversion of a part of a chattel is a conversion of the whole where the remaining part is thereby impaired in value or utility.²² An unauthorized appropriation or diversion of the proceeds of a sale by the purchaser is a conversion.²³ A seizure by an officer, under authority of a statute, of property being used in violation of law is not a conversion;²⁴ and a sale on foreclosure of a lien is not a conversion where there is due process of law and the owner has failed to take the steps provided by law for testing the right to the lien in the foreclosure proceedings.²⁵

Purchase of property. The buyer of property sold conditionally is liable in trover where he refuses to comply with the condition on receiving the property.²⁶ One who takes possession of, and claims rights in, a chattel through a purchase or other means, from a person who had no power to dispose of it, is guilty of conversion,²⁷ even though he receives it in good faith without notice of the rights of the owner;²⁸ and where property is intrusted by the owner to another for a specific purpose, liability for conversion attaches to one who receives it from such other and converts it to his own use.²⁹

A purchase at an invalid public sale may be a conversion.³⁰ An innocent purchaser of property from one who had lawfully acquired it from the owner is not liable for conversion for reselling the property.³¹

§ 207. — Waiver and Estoppel

The plaintiff may waive his right, or be estopped to maintain trover.

Plaintiff may waive his right to sue in trover, as by receiving the proceeds of defendant's wrongful act³² or by accepting the promise of a new article in place of the one converted.³³ Plaintiff will not be estopped to assert his rights unless his conduct under the circumstances was sufficient to raise an estoppel under the general rules of estoppel.³⁴ The seller of personal property holding a note for the purchase price in which title is retained in himself is not estopped to bring an action of trover for the property by the fact that he has previously sued out a purchase money attachment,³⁵ nor, as long as nobody was injured by his disclaimer, is a party who has disclaimed title to the property estopped thereby subsequently to assert it in an action of trover.³⁶ Where a materialman files a claim of lien after the time allowed by law, and never seeks to enforce it, he is not estopped afterwards to sue in trover for his materials.³⁷ A widow who, as an individual, has illegally disposed of the property of an estate is not estopped to maintain, as administratrix, an action of trover to recover it.³⁸

§ 208. Conditions Precedent

There must be compliance with all essential conditions precedent to the maintenance of an action in trover.

goods procured by defendant's fraud, plaintiff cannot recover without proof of a rescission of the contract and a return or tender of the consideration received,³⁹ but the tender is waived by defendant's refusal to rescind.⁴⁰ Institution of criminal proceedings against one who has stolen the property is not a condition precedent to an action of trover to recover possession thereof,⁴¹ especially when the offense was committed in a foreign jurisdiction,⁴² unless required by statute.⁴³

Demand to give bond. The law does not require that the officer serving a bail trover proceeding shall first make demand of defendant to give bond, in order that plaintiff may maintain his suit,⁴⁴ and failure on the part of the officer to make such a demand cannot in any way affect plaintiff's rights.⁴⁵

§ 209. — Demand and Refusal

The necessity and sufficiency of a demand for the return of the property and refusal thereof depend on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

No demand is necessary to maintain a suit in bail trover where there was an actual conversion before institution of the suit⁴⁶ or, ordinarily, where defendant is in possession of the property at the time suit is brought⁴⁷ and enters a plea denying plaintiff's right to recover,⁴⁸ the only purpose of the demand in such case being to save plaintiff the costs of court should defendant disclaim title to the property.⁴⁹ It is not necessary that there be a demand and refusal where property was taken under a wrongful levy;⁵⁰ where there was a wrongful use or disposition of property by a bailee thereof;⁵¹ where there was a transfer of property by one having no right or title thereto, irrespective of the character of his possession;⁵² or where there was other exercise of dominion and control over the property inconsistent with the rights of the owner.⁵³ Where there has been a demand on a corporation, it is not necessary that there be a demand on each of the individuals who control it, in order to hold them individually liable for conversion.⁵⁴ Where the owner of the property sues a bailee of the converter, service of the petition in the action on the bailee while the property is in its possession has been held to be sufficient notice of plaintiff's title to the property.⁵⁵

Where no actual or constructive conversion is otherwise shown, and it appears that defendant is in possession of the property, plaintiff must prove a demand and refusal.⁵⁶ Where a qualified or conditional refusal is not reasonable or justifiable under the circumstances and amounts to a denial of plaintiff's rights, it will be sufficient to support an action for conversion.⁵⁷ In order that a demand and refusal may be sufficient to establish a conversion, it must affirmatively appear that at the time thereof the property was in existence,⁵⁸ and that at the time of the demand the property was in defendant's possession or so far under his control that he could comply with the demand.⁵⁹ Demand is necessary where defendant has, in good faith and without notice of the owner's rights, received property from one not authorized to dispose of it.⁶⁰ When a demand is necessary, it must be made after plaintiff's right of possession has accrued.⁶¹

§ 210. Defenses

The defendant may, in bail trover, set up any legal defense which would defeat the right of the plaintiff to recover.

Defendant has the right, in bail trover, to set up any legal defense which would defeat plaintiff's right to recover.⁶² A defendant may always defend a trover action by showing that plaintiff does not have title or right of possession.⁶³ It is a good defense to an action of bail trover that title, where plaintiff relies on his title, is in defendant⁶⁴ or is outstanding in a third person,⁶⁵ that the right of possession is in defendant⁶⁶ notwithstanding legal title may be in plaintiff,⁶⁷ that plaintiff's right of action depends on an immoral contract,⁶⁸ or that plaintiff has ratified the act constituting the alleged conversion.⁶⁹ A person sued in his individual capacity for a conversion may justify by showing that the property alleged to have been wrongfully converted by him was rightfully held as the property of a lunatic for whom, subsequently to the conversion, he has been appointed guardian.⁷⁰ A plea that defendant possessed the property to accommodate plaintiff and that thereafter the property was wrongfully removed by a third person, without fault on the part of defendant, presents a meritorious defense to an action in trover.⁷¹

It is no defense, however, that defendant is not in possession of the property sued for,⁷² that defendant, although abetting the conversion in pursuance of a conspiracy, never had actual possession of the property, all of it being appropriated by his coconspirator;⁷³ as against the owner, that he is in possession under a contract for the repair of the property, where he claims no lien thereon;⁷⁴ that the property was returned,⁷⁵ or sent out of the state;⁷⁶ that defendant paid the value of the property to one not authorized to receive it⁷⁷ or in good faith took the property by consent of one mistakenly believed to be the owner;⁷⁸ or that plaintiff acquired title from a former owner in fraud of the rights of another, where defendant is not a privy of the person allegedly defrauded.⁷⁹

It is no defense that defendant was an agent acting for his principal in the matter⁸⁰ in good faith⁸¹ and in ignorance of the true owner's title;⁸² but it has been held that it is no conversion of a chose in action by an agent, in possession thereof for his principal, to decline compliance with a demand of the true owner for its delivery on the ground that he is a mere agent, and for the sole purpose of restoring the note to his principal, which purpose he executes before any action is brought against him.⁸³ The fact that plaintiff permitted the property to remain in the possession of defendant for a lengthy period of time will not bar plaintiff from recovering the property where the possession of defendant is not such as would vest title in him by prescription.⁸⁴

§ 211. — Recoupment, Set-Off, or Counterclaim

In the absence of some special intervening equity arising in his favor, the defendant may not claim damages by way of recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim.

Unless some special intervening equity arises in favor of defendant,⁸⁵ such as nonresidence or insolvency of plaintiff,⁸⁶ a claim for damages arising from a breach of contract cannot be interposed by way of recoupment,⁸⁷ set-off,⁸⁸ or counterclaim.⁸⁹ However, if the owner brings trover to recover an article which was taken from him in a crude state and improved by labor and expense placed on it by the person taking it, defendant is entitled to plead as a set-off and to recover, ex aequo et bono, the value of his labor and expense by which the property has been enhanced, provided he makes it appear that his trespass in taking the property was innocent or inadvertent, and was not committed willfully or in bad faith;⁹⁰ if the taking was not in good faith the set-off is not allowable.⁹¹ Defendant in trover, who claims that he purchased the property from plaintiff and paid part of the price, may, despite this rule, recover the amount of payment, where he prevails, and elects a money verdict instead of the property.⁹²

Action converted into equitable proceeding. In an action of trover, which had been converted into an equitable proceeding, it was not error to refuse to strike defendant's answer and to rule out evidence introduced in proof of its allegations, on the ground that a claim for damages arising from a breach of contract could not be allowed in recoupment to an action in trover.⁹³

If plaintiff elects to take money verdict the amount of his recovery may be offset by damage resulting to defendant by reason of any breach of contract by plaintiff which has not been waived.⁹⁴

§ 212. — Estoppel to Assert Defense

The defendant may, under the circumstances of a particular case, be estopped to assert a particular defense.

The giving of a forthcoming bond in bail trover does not estop defendant to set up the defense that plaintiff had ratified his alleged tortious act,⁹⁵ or to deny that he was ever in possession of the property to recover which the suit was instituted;⁹⁶ but one who has made a gift of a chattel to another and afterwards regains and holds possession of it is estopped in an action of trover brought by the donee to set up title in a third person at the time the gift was made.⁹⁷

§ 213. Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction is not defeated by the fact that the property is in custodia legis.

The fact that the property is in custodia legis does not operate to deprive the court of jurisdiction⁹⁸ but is matter to be pleaded by way of defense,⁹⁹ even if affording a ground for defeating the action.¹

§ 214. Time to Sue and Limitations

While bail trover must not be brought prematurely, it must be brought within the period of limitations fixed by statute.

The rules governing civil cases generally as to the commencement of actions prematurely are applicable in actions of bail trover.² The action must be brought within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations.³

§ 215. Parties Plaintiff

The rules as to parties plaintiff in civil actions apply in bail trover.

In accordance with the rules relating to civil actions generally, the action of bail trover should be brought in the name of the real plaintiff,⁴ and the person in whose name the action is brought is not to be regarded as a nominal and formal party only.⁵ The name of a usee as a coplaintiff will be treated as surplusage when the other coplaintiff was the owner of the goods at the time of their conversion,⁶ and a nominal plaintiff will fail to recover unless he establishes a right of action in himself.⁷ Where plaintiff is represented in a contract of sale by an agent who retains title in himself as agent until payment of the purchase price, in an action of bail trover to recover the property the agent need not sue in his own name;⁸ the action lies in the name of the principal.⁹

Who may or must be parties defendant in bail trover is governed by the general rules of civil actions.

It is unnecessary to make both parties to a bill of sale parties to bail trover proceedings brought by the person to whom the property was conveyed, where the petition alleged that one of them was in possession of property and refused to deliver it to plaintiff.¹⁰ Joint tort-feasors may properly be joined as parties defendant.¹¹ Defendant cannot, by an amendment to his answer equitable in its nature, have reformed a written instrument which he relies on to define the character of his possession of the property in controversy, without making the person who executed the instrument a party to the case.¹²

§ 217. Intervention

Generally, a third person has no right to intervene in bail trover.

A third person has no right to intervene in an action to recover personal property for the purpose of asserting equitable rights to the property,¹³ nor can he assert title to property seized in bail trover proceedings under a statute permitting third persons to claim property levied on by an officer under an execution or other process.¹⁴

§ 218. Bail Proceedings

- a. In general
- b. Construction of statutes authorizing proceeding

a. In General

A bail proceeding is a species of ancillary proceeding in connection with the action of trover, but is not an essential part thereof.

A bail proceeding is not an essential part of a trover case;¹⁵ such a proceeding constitutes a species of ancillary proceeding in connection with the action of trover.¹⁶ Plaintiff is not compelled to require bail of defendant, but has the privilege of making the affidavit provided by the statute for that purpose;¹⁷ but, where after a nonsuit, plaintiff, having retained possession of the property, renews his action of trover, it is improper to require bail.¹⁸ The purpose of bail process is to require security for the forthcoming of the property,¹⁹ or to authorize the seizure of the property,²⁰ or, if the property cannot be found, to arrest defendant;²¹ but it is not to punish him for illegal acts in obtaining property.²² The purpose of the statute allowing plaintiff to have possession of the property pending the suit is to preserve it so as to answer the final judgment.²³

b. Construction of Statutes Authorizing Proceeding

Statutes authorizing bail proceeding are to be strictly construed.

While the statute authorizing the proceeding for bail is not in derogation of common law,²⁴ it is in derogation of common right²⁵ and should be strictly construed;²⁶ but this does not require a literal compliance with the statutory requirements,²⁷ and the courts will give the statutes a reasonable application.²⁸

§ 219. — Affidavit

a. Requisites, validity, and sufficiency

b. Defects and objections

a. Requisites, Validity, and Sufficiency

The affidavit prescribed by statute may be made by the plaintiff, his agent, or his attorney, and will be sufficient if in the language of the statute.

The affidavit prescribed by statute to require defendant to give bail in the action of trover may be made by plaintiff,²⁹ his agent,³⁰ or his attorney,³¹ and affiant need not state his reasons for believing that the property will be cloigned or moved away.³² An affidavit in the language of the statute is valid and sufficient.³³ The affidavit may be made before a notary public,³⁴ who need not attest it under his notarial seal³⁵ or any other seal.³⁶ The affidavit must sufficiently describe the property to be seized by the officer, or produced by defendant, or for the production of which security can be required.³⁷ The property described at the time of the making of the affidavit, must be in the possession, custody, or control of defendant,³⁸ unless it affirmatively appears that since plaintiff's affidavit was made defendant has acquired the power of producing the property.³⁹

b. Defects and Objections

Objections to the affidavit must be properly taken, on proper grounds, and amendable defects may be cured by judgment.

The fact that plaintiff's affidavit was not sworn to positively, but on information and belief of his attorney, is an amendable defect,⁴⁰ which is cured by a judgment in the bail trover case against both principal and surety.⁴¹ On the trial it is not competent for defendant to make an oral motion to dismiss the bail proceeding and, in support of the motion, to introduce evidence in denial of the official character of the person whose attestation appears officially to the bail affidavit.⁴² The fact that the clerk attached the original affidavit, instead of a copy thereof as required, to the declaration and process, is not such a defect as entitles defendant to have the bail process dismissed,⁴³ nor is the proceeding rendered void by the fact that the copy attached is incomplete or otherwise defective.⁴⁴ The nature of the original affidavit as the basis for bail should be looked to in determining its validity, rather than an inaccurate copy served on defendant.⁴⁵

Substantial compliance with the terms of the statute prescribing the bond in bail trover actions is sufficient.

An obligation although not literally conforming to the terms of the statute prescribing it in bail trover actions is sufficient if in substantial compliance therewith.⁴⁶ Thus, a bond given in the terms of the statute, except that it is made payable to the sheriff instead of to plaintiff, is sufficient to support a judgment against the obligors where it was accepted by the sheriff and the parties treated it as valid, to the advantage of the obligors;⁴⁷ but a forthcoming bond given for both realty and personalty is not such a statutory bond as will support a summary judgment⁴⁸ although it may be good as a

The words "possession, custody, or control," as used in statute providing for bail in actions for personalty, do not state three different situations or grounds on which plaintiff can require a bond of defendant, but they express an alternative of terms, definitions, or explanations of the same thing in different words, meaning substantially that property is within power and dominion of defendant.—Smith v. common-law bond.⁴⁹ A bond is not rendered void by the fact that the affidavit provided for by the statute when plaintiff requires bail is not sworn to positively.⁵⁰ By giving the bond required to be in double the amount sworn to by plaintiff as the value of the property, defendant does not admit such amount to be the value,⁵¹ but he thereby admits that he has in his possession property answering to the description.⁵² A bond made and filed by defendant and not accepted by the arresting officer or plaintiff is not such a bond as authorizes a trial judge to enter judgment thereon against the sureties on the recovery of a verdict by plaintiff in the bail trover action.⁵³

§ 221. — Seizure of Property

The property described in the petition should be seized by the levying officer by taking it into his possession and exercising dominion over it.

It is essential to the seizure of property described in the petition in a bail trover suit that the levying officer take the property in his own possession and assume dominion over it.⁵⁴ The failure of the officer properly to perform his duty in the execution of a bail trover proceeding does not bar defendant from defending such a suit,⁵⁵ nor does it constitute ground for the dismissal of his answer.⁵⁶ Where an officer wrongfully seizes property under void or invalid process and delivers the property to the bail trover affiant who removes it to another county, the officer and affiant are liable as joint trespassers.⁵⁷

§ 222. — Sale of Property Seized but Not Replevied

Seized property not replevied may, in a proper case, be sold under the provisions of the statute.

Where neither party replevies property seized by the sheriff under bail process, and such property remains in the hands of the officer and is of a perishable nature or liable to deterioration from keeping, or there is expense attending its keeping, it may, under the provisions of the statute, be sold; and, where plaintiff authorized the sheriff to notify defendant of plaintiff's intention to apply for leave to sell the property, this was equivalent to a permission for the sheriff to proceed in plaintiff's name in obtaining such an order.⁵⁸

§ 223. Pleading

The rules of pleading in civil actions generally apply in bail trover actions.

The pleadings will be construed as a whole⁵⁹ and the general common-law rule of strict construction against the pleader applies.⁶⁰ Where a petition alleges ownership of property in plaintiff, a conversion of it by defendant, and a measure of damages peculiarly appropriate to a trover case, the case will be construed to be an action of trover.⁶¹ Defendant cannot, by special demurrer, compel plaintiff to disclose the evidence by which he proposes to prove title.⁶²

63. Statutory forms

(1) The legislative intent in enacting statute prescribing forms of actions for the recovery of personal property was not to abolish the distinctive features of good pleading but to authorize a simplified and concise form of a petition applicable to certain actions.—Breen v. Barfield, 56 S.E. 2d 791, 80 Ga.App. 615.
